Beirut At least 15 people were killed and 40 wounded when a car bomb exploded yesterday outside a mosque crowded with worshippers in Tripoli. The explosion happened as

Muslims were emerging after attending Friday prayers. One section of the mosque was destroyed and some people were trapped underneath the rubble before rescue workers dug them out.

Reports reaching Beirut said gunmen fired machine guns in the air to clear the way for ambulances carrying the victims to hospital.

In spite of the continuing there have been few attacks on this scale aimed at places of worship. This was the first attack on a Muslim mosque in recent ueeks and there is no indication who was resposible for the bombine.

Tripoli, the second largest city in Lebanon, lies 50 miles north of Beirut. Its population of 500,000 is predominantly Sunni Muslim.

Mugabe curbs press freedom

From Stephen Taylor Harare

In the second move against foreign correspondents in a week, the Zimbabwe Government yesterday gazetted emerg-ency powers regulations which provide for censorship of reports on the security situation in Matabeleland

The regulation, gazetted under the sweeping Law and Order Maintenance Act, are contained in a section titled: "Control of information relating to terrorism." They enable the authorities to prohibit the broadcast or publication anywhere of facts or statements on terrorism, sabotage or anti-insurgency operations by the security forces.

The section is almost identicle down to its wording to that gazetted in January 1978 by Mr Smith's administration to censor reporting on the guerrilla war and which was scrapped by Mr Robert Mugabe's Government at independence. In some sentences the only change is from "Rhodesia" to "Zim-

The one significant difference is that the 1978 regulations covered the country as a whole, while the new regulations will apply to areas designated by the Minister of Home Affairs. By yesterday afternoon no area had yet been designated and the regulations were consequently not in effect.

The legislation has been resurrected in response to a spate of reports on deepening security problems in Matabeleland, the western province afflicted by banditry and guerrilla violence over the past

A Government spokesman said yesterday, "This has been necessary because of events in Matabeleland and the kind of speculative reporting we have been getting".

Last weekend information heads of the six frontline states, includingZimbabwe,announced a ban on correspondents based in South Africa, saying that they had become agents of a policy of destabilization by Pretoria.

The Government has long maintained that Zimbabwe has been the victim of distorted and hostile reporting in the Western, mainly British, media. These claims intensified after the Matabeleland massacres of January and February and now scarcely a day goes by without some reference in the local media to "anti-Zimbabwe propaganda" in "the imperialist

The Government is asking not yet appointed staff needed because of health service reorganization

> The letter told regional administrators to aim for an overall reduction of staff of between 0.75 per cent and 1.0 per cent by the end of March, next year, but to apply the cuts differentially. Doctors and dentists directly employed were to be included in the "front line" group of staff dealing directly with patients, while bigger cuts were to be applied to the rest.

The second group, comprising works, maintenance, administrative, clerical, ambulance, and ancillary staffs, was to be cut between 1.35 per cent and 1.8 per cent. The larger reduction for that group is consistent with ministers' consistent beliefs that cuts there can be which represented the first achieved without affecting services to patients; an idea resisted by many health auth-orities because lack of support staff reduces the time spent on present care by medical staff. Individual staff targets for each region were sent out with the letter. To make the calculations "consistent with ministers' wishes that manpower savings should make a greater contribution to the recent cash limit reductions the manpower figures have been reduced by more than the revenue cuts would imply".

Regions that could advance a "reasoned case" by the end of August would be allowed to vary their manpower targets, provided that the outcome was consistent overall with the national aims.

The letter added: "Variations which go further in the desired direction than indicated in the formula-based calculations will be expecially well received). Mr Hucklesby said yesterday

Meriden appoints liquidator

From Clifford Webb

The remaining 180 members of the Meriden motor cycle coopertive yesterday voted to put the company, which has debts of almost £2m into liquidation.

A year ago the Government wiped out debts of £11m owing on state aid received since the cooperative was formed eight years ago under the sponsorship of Mr Wedgewood Benn, who was then Secretary of State for Industry.

Several similar cooperatives which were aided by Mr Benn have already closed.

Meriden has not produced a motorcycle since February, when the workers were laid off.

At the end of a five-hour meeting yesterday Mr John Rosamond, the workers' elected chairman announced that the accountants Peat Marwick & Mitchell had been nominated as liquidator for a meeting of shareholders and creditors to be held on August 26.

The cooperative was launched in March, 1975 with the help of a £4.2 loan and a £750.000 grant. Another factor in Meriden's favour was the general reluc-tance to admit that the once dominant British motor cycle industry - it held 70 per cent of world markets in the 1950s could not be rescued. Triumph was one of the best known names in the industry and commanded immense loyalty. amone enthusiasts.

Only two years earlier the ment, faced with the imminent collapse of BSA/Triumph, had provided £5m to smooth the way for Mr Dennis Poore to lead a single British motor cycle group combining AMC (AJS, Norton and Matchless) and Villiers (two-stroke engines) with BSA and Triumph to form Norton Villiers Triumph.

It was Mr Poore's decision to olose Triumph Meriden and concentrate production on BSA's Birmingham works which triggered the Meriden sit-

Mrs Patricia Neal appeared in the High Court yesterday after tipstaffs ended her sit-in at Crawley Hospital, West Sussex, by arresting her (David Nicholson-Lord writes). She was led out of the hospital in her nightclothes, with her baby in her arms.

She gave birth at the hospital at the beginning of June and then refused to leave, defying a court order, in protest at conditions in the one room in Springfield Road, Crawley, which she shares with her busband and their two older children.

Yesterday, facing an order for committal to prison, she promised to abide by the court order. Mrs Adrianne Uziell-Hamilton, her counsel, said that Mrs Neal had been "at to see Captain Phillips test the jumps at their maximum heights. His round of the twomile course took just over six minutes. The round was aimed at allaying fears over the difficulty of the course, which is the first designed by Captain Phillips in his 15 years' experience of eventing. When the jumps were shown on television earlier this week several complaints were received from the public about the severity of the fences. After an inspection yesterday by two RSPCA men, Mr Mike Bullen, the British Horse Society steward-in-charge, said: "Obviously they left satisfied having seen all the fences".

More than 40,000 people are expected to attend the two-day event which began yesterday with dressage and show jumping. It continues today with further dressage, show jumping and the main cross country event. In all, about 160 competitors are taking part.

Calm Shultz rules out use of force in Central America

Mr George Shultz, the US US strategy: to persuade leftSecretary of State, brought his calming and conciliatory manner to bear on a sceptical Senate foreign relations committee policy in the concentration of the cards of the with repeated assurances that military conflict is not contemplated in Central America.

He gave the performance that the White House was hoping for a no nonsense statement of Administration strategy in the region, a vigorous defence of huge military manoeuvres in and around Honduras, and an assertion that as a result of American peace efforts "some-thing has now begun to happen" on the diplomatic front.

He suggested that the US show of strength had given incentives to Cuba, Nicaragua and leftist guerrillas in El Salvador to negotiate for peace. He said American forces in the region were not seeking con-frontation and would withdraw - though defending themselves if attacked.

Mr Shultz's opening statement to the committee, and his in Niceragua and El Salvador responses to generally mild but and pointed to the conciliatory dor to the United Nations. least five people died in an apparently successful coup against the Upper Voltan leader. Major Jean-Baptiste Ouedraogo, sources at the Yalgadogo Ouedraogo Hospital said vesterday.

The dead were two soldiers and three civilians. Six French nationals, including a four-yearold child, were among the 15 people known to have been wounded in the fighting, which followed the coup by the former Prime Minister, Captain Thomas Sankara.

The French casualties were returning from a restaurant to their home near Major Oueduogo's residence when they were hit by bursts from automatic weapons.

Syrians deride McFarlane

From Robert Fisk, Damascus

When Mr Robert McFarlane, the latest of President Reagan's Middle East envoys, arrives in Damascus today, he will be greeted by President Assad's familiar rejection of any Syrian troop withdrawal from Lebanon while Israeli soldiers remain in the country.

As if to emphasize the bleak prospects which awaited him in Damascus, the Syrian press vesterday dubbed Mr McFar-lane "The American High Commissioner in Beirut", an unflattering reference to US support for President Gemayer's government in Lebanon.

Over the past week, President Assad, his ministers and the state-controlled newspaper, have reiterated to the point of tedium the doctrine that whatever blandishments America might offer in return for a unable to pull its soldiers out of Lebanon until the Lebanese-Israeli withdrawal agreement has been torn up.

You Can't Take It With You

Lytteiton

I last saw this piece 40 years ago one of the comic experiences of a lifetime. Spectators coming fresh to it at the Lyttelton stand a good chance of getting the same impression, especially as Hart's and Kaufman's extended family are no longer speaking in thick Lancashire accents, and have access to a celiar for making fireworks, a printing press, a. chocolate-crammed skull, and the whole inventory of eccentric properties that fill: up every inch of space in Grant Hicks's thoroughly lived-in

Radio Skin deep

Among my fellow passengers on me that that strangeness may a long flight home recently were here have been somewhat two young women, one accompanied by a man, all fair familiarity.

Scandinavians, I believe, and each girl clutching a baby which only by the most extraordinary chance could have been their own, since one was very black and negroid, the other paler skinned but black-eyed, dark hair and with the typical features of the present-day Latin-American Indian. The babies had to be adopted, taking their first enormous step in the process so graphically described by Andy Price in Motherland (Radio 4, July 30; producer, Sharon Banoff).

Without a doubt these two children would be coming into an environment indescribably more affluent than the one they had just left, and neither was old enough to retain any clear memories of its origins. So surely this adoption was a proper act of mercy, a right thing to be doing. The same could be said, with emphasis, for many of those who contributed to the programme - black, Vietnamese, Hongkong Chinese - but, not one of those who skin colour and/or physical type differed much from the broad range of the Northern European norm, could really be said to have been fully absorbed into an adopted country and culture. At best the change had been a success on balance.

One could almost read the future for those two infants in the plane in the covert glances of their fellow passengers whose expressions spoke of admiration and approval, via profound misgiving to barely suppressed hostility. Hearing Motherland confirmed the likelihood of that prediction: while in their new British families and their circle, these children had found love, support and a high degree of security, outside it was often a different matter. It may or may not be so that we are all brothers and sisters under the skin; in practice the skin is about as far as we go. We react first, and all too often last, to difference, to strangeness and only by an effort of will or in the end through long familiarity do we seem able to mitigate what that first reaction does.

There is an element of strangeness in the work of Samuel Beckett which always challenges the listener's accept-ance, but hearing Worstward Ho (Radio 3, Aug 4; director, Ronald Mason) it occurred to long run of monologues for radio, we were of course for the first time in years without the mesmeric voice of the late Patrick Magee. Norman Rodway was the speaker and a fine performer he is, but his voice does not, probably cannot, suggest that dogged, slightly self-mocking anguish which his predecessor managed by some means to induce in the minds of the listeners, thus persuading them to share in Beckett's vision.

Less than mesmerised, it struck me that his "On, somehow on. . . nohow on. . "and his "Only one good, gone, gone for good. ." (which I take as meaning that there is both no alternative to, and no point in, proceeding through life) closely resemble to the point of repetition what he has said to me on a string of previous occasions. So now I wonder if it is because of the magic of the man's name that radio allows him to repeat himself to a degree it would not tolerate from other writers. On the other hand, I will take almost any amount of the same from Johnny Morris, perhaps because his Around the World in 25 Years (Radio 4, Mondays and Tuesdays) is so blessedly free of any intention to tell me anything about Life, but is ceaselessly interested in the lives of the people he encounters. His description last week of how on their travels through France he and "Tubby Foster" turned up at a château fallen on hard times and reduced to taking guests in was a masterpieceofobservationandin its way as clear an example as need be of the state of "On, somehow on... nohow on..." Long may Morris circumorbit, but will he...? for "Tubby Foster" (in the ample frame of his producer, Brian Patten) is dead and I am sure that this enchanting series, like much else that came out of BBC Bristol, owed much to the partnership of performer with that one gifted man.

Oh how I wish that Morris and Patten had had a hand in Capital's Queen Mum, A Loving Profile (Aug 1). Then we might have heard something. But this 83rd birthday celebration, well-made and well-intentioned though it was, somehow missed its subject altogether and left us none the closer to her at the end.

Europe's wine prospects Part 3

Germans expect best vintage since 1976

Despite the vagaries of the weather, German wine-growers are guardedly optimistic about this year's harvest. The third part of the series on European wine is written by JAMES HUTCHINSON in Bonn.

The quality of this year's German wines is expected to be the highest since the memorable 1976 vintage. But predictions that it will be the wine of the century are received with scepticism. As one grower put it: "No sooner do we have a heatwave than people start making that kind of forecast. We can reach a true judgment only when wine

One thing is certain - this year's yield will be much smaller than that of 1982 The wine trade is pleased about this, because last year a wet summer caused the market to be swamped by wine, much of it of inferior quality.

Since the wine regions of Germany are much closer together than those of France they are not subject to wide climatic differences, and therefore the optimistic forecasts hold good for all German wines Rhine-Pfalz: Produces quarter of total German output. The crop is well advanced, and the hot weather has made up for a two or three-week delay in the appearances of the biossom caused by a relatively cool spring. Production is expected to be down by as much as 40 per cent on 1982, a record year for quantity.

Mosel-Sear-Ruwer: Much better quality than 1982, but not expected to be quite up to the 1976 standard. In 1976 we had sunshine right up to parvest time," a spokesn the Growers Association said in Treir. "We cannot count on this year and if we get hailstorms our calculations could go WIODE.

ing extravagant predictions. 'It's too early to crow about things even when the wine is in thge cellar," said a grower.
"You should really wait until it's in the glass." The quantity will be about 30 per cent down on last year. The Rheingan is famous for its Riesling, and the area produces about three per cent of Germany's total wine Baden: The vines look promising, both as to quality nd quantity, although after the heatwave they could do with a little moisture. "It's too early to make a firm prognosis," a spokesman said. "We don't normally start the harvest until September 20, and a prolonged wet period could put paid to our hopes. I don't think we are

Efforts to save Venice founder over tenders

Efforts to protect Venice and its lagoon from the floods which submerge Saint Mark's Square and the city centre every winter are back at their starting point.
The Corte dei Conti, a kind of public auditor's office, has ruled that a 11.8 billion lire (£5m) contract awarded to the Nuova Venezia consortium for feasibility studies and preliminary work is null. It said the contract should have been put out to tender, instead of being assigned privately to the consortium. The Corte dei Conti also expressed doubts about whether the money was available. The consortium was to have implemented a project, drawn up by a government commission, for a system of partly fixed and partly mobile barriers built at the three entrances

The problem attracted international attention in November 1966 when Saint Mark's Square was flooded to a depth of 6ft and the destruction of the city was threatened. Funds were raised inter- up a commission, which drew nationally, and Unesco took up the latest project.

British Soft Drinks Council, and I am afraid it's the burst bubble of its own pride. The council complained to the Code of Advertising Practice Committee against a Scottish Dairy Council advertisement headlined: Are your children learning chemistry at school? Or having it for lunch?" The advertisement referred to the dangers of fizzy soft drinks with "few nutrients" as opposed to milk or fruit juice, and followed a list of chemicals contained in fizzy drinks, sweets and crisps with the claim: "It's not a chemistry lesson. For many children it's lunch". The soft drinks industry complained that it had been unfairly discredited. Alas, the copy panel which ruled on the case found the advertisement "showed a positive approach to the problems which could arise from unwise eating habits" and "appeared to be a truthful comment". I bet that makes the soft drink manufacturers belch.

Reagan's backyard blunder

New York Unless he is stopped by Congress - and only Congress and the force of public opinion can stop him - Ronald Reagan could plunge this country into the most unwanted, unconscionable, unnecessary and unwinnable war in its history, not excepting Vietnam.

Reagan sees the trouble in Central America as coming from outside the area, as revolution exported from the Soviet Union and Cuba. His response is to dispatch huge naval and air armadas to the waters off the Nicaraguan coasts and thousands of American troops to the ranchlands and jungles of neighbouring Honduras.

If the revolutionaries in Nicaragua and the guerrillas in El Salvador whom they support do not capitulate before this display of American might - as they almost certainly will not - Reagan will have left himself little choice between reversing his Central America policy and moving in with American guns, planes and men.

Since the premises of Reagan's policy are wrong, his actions stemming from that policy are wrong, Latin America's revolutions, including those of Mexico, Cuba, El Salvador and Nicaragua, are homegrown, not exported from anywhere else. The undoubted communist influence on these revolutions - always strong and always inevitable - cannot be nullified by external military force, as even Reagan should have learned from the Bay of Pigs and the events that followed.

These revolutions and revolutionaries can be a threat to our security (a minor one at that) only if we force them completely into the Soviet corner and isolate them there. The Russians, their agents and their disciples cannot do as much harm to the long-term interests of the United States as by John B. Oakes

we are doing to ourselves by imitating them in trying to impose our style of democracy on people who may be totally unready or

Because of the brutal purge of Central American experts as soon as he took office, Reagan had no one around to tell him that the Sandinista arms build-up in Nicaragua might just possibly not have been impelled by the desire to conquer all the rest of Central America for Castro and Marx. It might have stemmed from genuine fear, founded on history, of direct American military intervention. Fantastic as that may have seemed to Reagan at the time, it doesn't seem so fantastic today - certainly no more fantastic than what he is doing right now to Honduras.

He is remilitarizing this pathetically poor and helpless country just as it is emerging from years of military rule. He is undermining its fragile democracy and indirectly inciting open warfare between Honduras and its neighbours. He is using Honduras not only as a springboard for forces opposed to the Nicaraguan regime but also as a training ground - on the cheap - for Salvadoran government troops.

Perhaps no one in the Reagan entourage knew that the last Central American war - a brief but savage one just a few years ago - was between El Salvador and Honduras. Historically, the two countries have had an unfriendly relationship. The presence of Salvadoran troops on Honduran soil is a prescription for trouble - for which Reagan again will have to bear the responsibility.

The record in Guatemala is no better. Guerrilla warfare has been smouldering there for at least 20 years. Even less than El Salvador, less than Nicaragua, did Guatemala need Castro or Marx or communist propaganda to pit rich against poor, oligarchy against peasantry, army against guerrillas. While gross national product has gone up, the living standard of 80 per cent of the population has gone down as large-scale agriculture has pushed the Indian peasants into ever less fertile and ever less productive areas in which to grow their own scanty food.

Guatemala's born-again president, who was catapulted into power after a postelection coup last year, may be somewhat less bloodthirsty than his infamous predecessors, but they at least did not have the temerity to claim, as he does, that they were in direct personal contact with the Almighty. Because President Efrain Rios Montt talks to God and not Marx, the Reagan administration can think of nothing better to do with American power and money than to resume the military support that was cut off several years ago because of Guatemala's abominable human rights record. American military supplies have no purpose in Guatemala but continued repression of the Guatemalan people, particularly its large Indian segment.

The growing military involvement of the United States in Nicaragua, Honduras and Guatemala – as well as in El Salvador – may stimulate Reagan's ego and self-image as standing up to communism, but it is painfully clear that it does nothing to enhance our national security or the welfare of the people of Central America.

Plotting to save the good old British vegetable

Patricia Clough reports growing unrest over EEC policy

If you have taken over an old kitchen garden or allotment, think twice before pulling up those odd. brown-leaved lettuces or those curious beans with pods pointing upwards. When tidying the garden shed, pause before throwing away any old, faded seed packets. You may be destroying the last examples of some ancient British vegetable. condemning it to oblivion for ever.

This fate is threatening many old vegetables, grown for centuries in Britain's gardens and fields, the seeds handed down through generations, passed on to neighbours or bought in local markets. Many were restricted to small areas where they grew well, sometimes to one village or even only one plot.

Now they face extinction, the victims of standardization measures throughout the EEC which, in Britain, can mean fines of up to £1,000 for anyone who sells their

It may already be too late for the Durham miners' leek, which helped to keep its growers going through the grim days of the depression. Mr dant at the Northern Horticultural Society's headquarters at Harlow Car, near Harrogate, is looking for survivors but fears it has died out.

There is the Martock bean, cultivated since Cistercian monks started vegetable breeding in Britain in the 12th century, which survives in the Somerset village of Martock. Even older is the Ragged Jack, a course, pinkish variety of kale believed to have been brought to Britain by the Romans.

The old bean and pea varieties which dried well and provided Britons with a valuable source of protein for winter are vanishing, leaving the field to the kind that freeze well. Such is the Carlin pea, bred since Elizabethan times and common until the Second World War, and the soldier bean, so called because of a brown soldier-like figure on the white husk. Both are now rare. "If varieties like this go we are losing a unique genetic resource", Mr Swindells says. "Once it has gone you can't breed it back again." It is not really the EEC's fault. Like several other countries, Britain had been sorting out its seed regulations in the 1960s, but after it joined the EEC these were tightened up still further to suit Community regulations. More than 1,000 names regulations. More than 1,000 names Henry Doubleday Research Associa-were dropped and others are being tion at Bocking, near Braintree in now an official EEC list of permitted varieties, which is an amalgam of the ten official national lists.

The point of the lists was to create order among much confusion. Some varieties were called by different names in different parts of EEC countries. Conversely, the same names were being applied to several varieties that were in fact quite different. Government officials maintain that they simply threw out names, and that gardeners looking for a certain variety would find it under another name. But critics maintain that many actual varieties were dropped in the process.

One uncalculated side effect of the lists was to encourage the popular, commercially profitable, market-gardening varieties at the expense of the small, old-fashioned or local varieties planted by the amateur gardener. Any seedsman who wants to register a new variety has to pay about £600 for testing and another £80 a year for registration, which he can afford only if he is sure it will sell well - that is, at least 5,000 nackets. Anvone can register an old variety, but they must be prepared to produce it on a suitable scale, and they do not get royalties.

As a result, the old-fashioned, space-saving amateur gardeners' which grows to around five or six feet, is giving way to shorter, bushier versions more easily harvested by the commercial market gardener. Brussels sprouts plants which keep the housewife supplied over several weeks are disappearing in favour of those which produce sprouts all at once for mechanical cutting. Varieties on the lists must be "distinct" and "stable", which suits the modern, high-yield, F.1 hybrid varieties which come up virtually identical, but not the primitive oldfashioned vegetables whose offspring are as different as the children in any family. The old-fashioned grower has smaller yields, but he could be reasonably sure that at least some would survive disease, a hard winter or drought. They might be less attractive, smaller and tougher than modern types but, their growers swear, they taste so much

However, in the vegetables' moment of peril, there are defenders to the rescue. First among these is Lawrence D. Hills, director of the weeded out as time passes. There is Essex. He has founded a seed library from which members can borrow unlisted seeds, replacing them when the plants reproduce their own. Members can become "seed guardians", raising and caring for threatened varieties.

Mr Hills is collecting seeds from Spain and Portugal in preparation for those countries' entry into the EEC, foreseeing that their richness of varieties will dwindle in the same way as Britain's. He is looking for a Greek correspondent who will obtain seeds of vegetables cultivated for centuries by the monks at Mount Athos monastery.

Thanks partly to his efforts, a gene bank has been set up with funds from Oxfam at the National egetable Research Station at Wellesbourne, near Stratford-on-Avon. In the two and a half years since it was founded, it has collected 4,700 different kinds of seeds – the target is 20,000 – which are preserved at minus 25 degrees C.

Like Mr Hills, the research station encourages gardeners to send in seeds of little-known varieties or any old seed packets they may find. The bank can preserve a variety for centuries - if it gets the seeds in time. "If they do not come to us many are likely to die out", a spokesman said.

The gene bank is part of a worldwide network which is growing up amid growing concern at the loss of genetic diversity. The seeds pre-served may hold qualities such as disease resistance, hardiness or nutritional values which may be valuable for future generations.

Mr Derek Enright, Member of the European Parliament for Leeds, has extracted from Mr Poul Dalsager, the EEC Agriculture Commissioner, an assurance that the EEC will treat the problems of the small gardener sympathetically. Some of his constituents are worried about the future of the Leeds lettuce, a small local variety.

Many old vegetables can be seen, and sometimes even tasted, at five vegetable sanctuaries. One is at Mr Hills' establishment near Braintree, another at Harlow Car. The others are at Quarry Bank Mill, Styal, near Wilmslow, Cheshire, which grows no plant developed later than 1900, Dean's Court, Wimborne, Dorset, which has an old walled kitchen garden, and in the collection of historic vegetables, including the Martock bean, at the Bishop's Palace, Wells, Somerset.

It was now a piece of land a la postage stamp, behind me was a sign, building plot for sale, dead centre was a beautiful Weeping Ash, and on the border a Superb Copper Beech. Milligan thinks! those trees should have a preservation order on, so I contacts those balls of fire the Barnet Borough Council, & Jo, they speak and say Yes the Copper Beech has a Preservation Order, but, ha ha, not the tree in the middle of the plot (the Ash)... second letter. "Why is the Weeping Ash, which is rarer than the Beech unprotected? They answer, (wait for it), because of its condition, Gadzooks! is it pregnant?

I call unto me those fellows Men o' the Trees, who inspect the Ash with the sort of loving care a Dutch Jeweller would handle the Hope Diamond, they talk of the tree as "her". "She's oririte, fact is she's un beauty, nought wrong with her." I pass their observations to the Barnet Borough Council, but they, like the sons of fun they are, insist that their expert is more expert than the Men o' the Trees. So, I'm faced with the task of saving the trees, how much is the land? The Vendor, friend of mine says, Spike it's £50,000 but in cash £15,000, we settle for £12,000, but I haven't a prepare but he he but I haven't a penny, but ha ha, here come de judgment day.

In every other Eden beyond this sceptred Isle there is a serpent, and sometimes two: "Use a walking stick in snakeinfested areas - they might attack the stick rather than you - and carry a torch at night".

There is an old, laborious schoolboy joke about "enjoying the trip" which is sometimes produced when someone falls over. Micro-pharm Ltd. the publishers of Have a Good Trip! seem to have borrowed from its humour, planting instruc-tional banana skins along the routes of all our holiday ambitions. As we know from the song, it's advice which contradicts a tradition. In fact, worthy, chirpy little works of this nature encourage paralysis of our legendary spirit of adventure, not to mention the new disease of victimology. British tourists, I'm are singularly unhelpful in this area. They offer only one curt reference themselves with their water purification tablets and first-aid kits. It was not always thus. Did Lady Bitten I can handle, What about Tony Samstag was not always thus. Did Lady Bitte Hester Stanhope take out package eaten?

I hope it isn't quite medical nonsense to suggest that if you're a regular traveller, then high level of protection can be counterproductive. After years of travelling in Europe it would never occur to me to avoid the local tap water and this nonchalance, I believe, has now accustomed my system to minor, non-British water-borne bugs.

Then there's insurance. I wish I. had a pound for every pound I've spent on travel insurance. At one time I held the superstitious belief that a package policy possessed the properties of a magic amulet, and that if you didn't take out insurance, some divine and vengeful broker-inthe-sky would send flood, plague, earthquake and defective deck

Panda to everyone's taste

The giant panda, when you consider it carefully, is really a useless creature with little more than its deceptively charming appearance to commend it. Even the most passionate conservationists recognize that the millions of pounds squandered annually on attempts to increase its numbers could be far more profitably spent on other species, some of which, if not so vacuously cuddlesome, are at least edible or intelligent.

In public relations terms, however, the beast is nothing if not big business. Apart possibly from David Bellamy, it is all that millions of people know about conservation and all they need to know. Its stylized teddy-bear features are ubiquitous as the emblem of the World Wildlife Fund; it is one of China's most sought-after exports, and its potency as a fund-raiser and focus of zoological research ultima-tely demolishes the arguments of those who would dismiss it as an evolutionary dead end. Apart from its notorious sexual and thus procreative inefficiency, the giant panda's general unfitness for survival is programmed into the ludicrously specialized habitat it requires. It feeds, for example, primarily on a few species of hamboo.

Those species, in an uncanny parallelism to the animal they support, have, over millennia, evolved a complicated and slow reproductive method: they flower on average every 80 years and then die off for several years before regener-ating. The result is famine. One such famine, in the 1970s, killed 138 pandas, more than one tenth of the estimated panda population in Such famines are localized - not all species of bamboo burst into flower at once all over China - and in the past have been easily overcome by the pandas themselves. It was simply a matter of shifting their lazy butts to the nearest hillside. In a fairly small reserve area, however, there can be no escape.

Warnings of impending famine at the important Wolong reserve in Sichuan province have been circulating for the past few years; now, according to the World Worldlife Fund, flowering has begun. About 200 pandas in the 124 square mile reserve are at risk, and flowering has reserve are at risk, and flowering has also begun in Boaxing County, near an intensive study of the ecology of by, which supports a further bamboo itself, of which there are hundred. Even if we could predict and understand the mechanism of flowering it is unlikely that we could prevent it without exorbitant research and management programmes... THE MORTGAGE MAGNET

Home ownership has long been the savings market could not feature the housing market high among British priorities. In avoid queues forming. The which helps spread demand to this sphere, at least, the individ-recent 14 per cent rise in their other sectors of the economy. It ual ambitions of millions of voters have been fully reflected in public policy. The years since measures and decisions aimed at promoting owner-occupation and aiding house buyers. The right to buy council homes will swell the number of new mortgages by some 200,000 to around million this year and nearly double the number of first-time buyers. This year alone, the limit on tax relief on interest has been raised to mortgages up to £30.000; the Finance Act has opened the wholesale money markets to the building societies; and a court decision will allow hem to issue index-linked nortgages at low nominal interest rates for the first time.

It is doubtful if so strong ommon and laudable a domestic ambition needs so many rtificial stimulants in order to lourish; especially those that ause dubious distortions in the nousing and financial markets.

Popular as such measures indoubtedly are, their success iraws yet more of the country's avings into the housing market at the expense of productive business. Informed estimates suggest that an extra £15 billion will flood into new house mortgages this year, more than the increase in bank credit to the rest of the economy, even at a time of business recovery.

Of more immediate concern, the current housing boom, and the building societies' determination to minimize rationing by queue, threaten to keep the money supply well above target, to encourage the sort of financial instability that undermined ecovery prior to the oil crisis in ikelihood of higher interest rates for the economy as a whole.

After two slack years the were, on some estimates, rising at an annual rate of about 13 per cent, drawing in more would-be buyers anxious not to miss out. The building societies drew on their reserves to meet demand but, given strong competition in stabilized matters, helping both to slow the rise in prices and 1979 have seen a plethora of new double the monthly inflow of funds. But this has only been achieved at a price. Building society deposits are included in wider measures of the money supply and these were leading the general breaking of monetary targets before the effects of the latest increase in deposits. These wider money measures must take on ever greater significance as it becomes clear that many wealthier borrowers, egged on by private financial advisers, are abusing mortgage tax relief to borrow more than they need on changing houses to pay incidental bills, spend in the shops, or invest in other financial assets.

More directly, the extra deposits must come from somewhere. In this case, the building societies are competing heavily. with banks and the Government for savings. Competition with banks has now gone beyond the high street into the money markets, where the societies hope to raise £4 billion in certificates of deposit, a market of only £11 billion, hitherto dominated by the banks. There is plenty of money in wholesale markets at this time of year, but, come the autumn, competition is bound to increase bank costs, adding pressure to raise interest rates at a time when industry is anxious to avoid any such jolt.

This is no criticism of the building societies. They are doing their job within the rules set by public policy. Their role has been increased by the transfer of council house finance to the private sector. And their 1973, and to heighten the task has been made harder by the erratic behaviour of banks, which leapt in to seize more than a third of the mortgage market housing market suddenly took on easy terms last year, then off earlier this year. House prices drew back, leaving the building societies struggling to fill the gap and live with the effects of last year's competition on lending borrowing rates seems to have is possible to allow for this by adjusting money targets, but as the 1972-73 period showed, it is hard to return to a more normal course of money growth without disruptive rises in interest rates. The financial cycle has its own dynamic which does not wait on economic policies.

> The way to ease these problems is to reconsider public policies towards housing incentives. It has long been realized that, within the limits set by alternative land use, the price of houses is largely determined by people's ability to pay for them. In the long run, tax reliefs are merely soaked up in higher prices, leaving the next round of buyers no better off. Mortgage relief on the extra £5,000 has already produced some signs of higher than avarage price increases at the upper end of the housing market. Until this happened, there was a tacit understanding that inflation would whittle away tax relief in a relatively painless manner. It would be wholly impractical to abolish tax reliefs overnight, but reasonable by annual instalments over a period. This would not merely ease growing finan-cial pressures. It would when completed make possible a 21/2 pence cut in the standard rate of income tax and avoid both crosssubsidies and abuses of the

> Today, we are still moving in the opposite direction. It is unjust, for instance, that an increase in the mortgage rate by clipping public revenue should require tax increases, cuts in public services, or sales of more shares in British Petroleum, If inflation-linked mortgages make any impact, we shall see a further comparative rise in low-price housing to destroy lasting benefits to first-time buyers and needlessly draw more savings into housing. The time has surely come when the integral importance of housing in the financial system should be recognized and public policies to encourage home ownership

It is not a world that one would wish to wake up and find oneself trapped in. The artist, the Victorian painter Richard Dadd. was trapped for 40 years in a world of obsessive delusions that the atmosphere of the painting communicates haunting impressions of As a young man he murdered his father in a fit of insanity, and he spent the rest of his life in mental hospitals, continuing to work, industriously and in almost total critical committee which reviews export still be missed then.

The scene is a dank corner of a isolation, at his former trade of wood, smelling probably of painting. One of his two princi-toadstools, over-shadowed with pal masterpieces is "Contradiction. Oberon and Titania", which was sold in March for es, their robes held above what £550.000, twice what any Victorian painting has ever fetched at exceptional significance from the auction before.

> The anonymous buyer is foreign, and the Government has refused an export licence. This gives British interests until November to match the bid and keep the picture in a public collection here. But the freakishly high price has made galleries slow to come forward to raise the money, and in the current economic climate, with so many other calls on their resources. they can scarcely be blamed.

> In our recent correspondence about the painting, one reader complained not unreasonably that whenever a work of art is threatened with export a chorus of protest goes up as if it was at risk of falling into the clutches of barbarians. There is indeed an insularity about some campaigns to retain works having no special links with this country, by artists already well represented here. There is a general cultural case for the diffusion of major works and there are commercial and libertarian aguments for not interfering unduly with the licences receives thousands of applications a year, and delays approval in only a handful of cases in all categories - only nine times last year. It only imposes its temporary bar in cases of aesthetic or scholarly points of view, or because of close connexions with British history or national life.

"Oberon and Titania" fully many centuries. Moreover, it was in Kos that, in the fifth century BC, deserves to qualify on at least two of these three counts. It is Hippocrates, the father of modern the second finest example of the rare work of an artist who, apart from the intrinsic quality of his work, is a figure of exceptional it is also a mecca for pilgrims - both psychological interest, in illusmedical and others - who visit the trating the theme of the interplay ruined Asklepieion and also linger between genius and insanity in under the great plane tree, the nineteenth and twentieth century descendant of the original under art. The painting is also of some which Hippocrates practised and taught medicine 25 centuries ago. It significance as a monument to Victorian society's treatment of the mentally ill, which our own age has no occasion to be condescending about.

There is no doubt that it deserves to qualify: but does it deserve to qualify at the price? Any public collection with foresight could have had it for £7,000 in 1964 (even in real terms, less than a tenth of this year's price). But in 1964 £7,000 seemed decidedly steep. No one can say whether £550,000 will seem steep or modest when another 20 years have passed:

Student unions From Ms Jane Taylor

Sir, Roger Scruton comes from a crop of Thatcherite ideologues who make their reputations by promoting extremist ideas in the name of "sweet reasonableness". His article on student unions ("Pros and conned on the campus", August 2) is a case in point linking by inference the work of full-time (sabbatical) student union officers with a supposed conspiracy for left-wing takeover of society.

Mr Scruton's image of the job done by student full-timers is wishful thinking. It's not sit-ins or protests which dominate their time, but rather running complex and sophisticated unions with up to £1m turnover, developing substantial commercial services; dealing with innumerable grant, housing and welfare problems; and contributing to social, sporting and educational aspects of college life.

If student unions did not employ full-timers and staff to manage their affairs, I suspect Mr Scruton would jump at writing Times articles on the incompetence and irresponsibility of mere students controlling 461 Holloway Road, N7.
public funds.

August 2

Campus magazine has very little to do with "the innocence of student politics", as Mr Scruton suggests. It was launched, and is now run by former prominent members of the Federation of Conservative Students, including one who later became its chairman - ie a full-time, party-paid student organiser. Amongst its early "satirical" articles Campus carried a two-page defence of South African apartheid.

As the largest student partypolitical organisation, Federation of Conservative Student's societies do very nicely out of public funds. NUS will always defend their right to organise amongst students. We will also continue to defend students' democratic right to oppose and protest against further erosion in the amount and standard of education on offer to the people of this country.

Perhaps Mr Scruton could find some equally serious problem to exercise his undoubted intellectual capacities? Yours faithfully.

From the Director of Social Services housing and no more than 7 per cent of Warwickshire County Council

Sir, May I enlist your assistance to dissuade some of our most distinguished politicians from referring to elderly people as a burden on the working population.

Apart from the gratuitous offence to a section of the community who, by definition, have done more than the rest of us to create our national wealth and are therefore entitled to share in it, the basis for these attacks is ill-informed.

For instance, the number of people over the age of retirement has actually been falling for some time and while the number of people in the very oldest age groups continues to increase, the number of people over the age of 75 years will reach its maximum in 1991 and then continue steady until the end of the

The number of people who are even older will continue to rise, although this is more than compen-sated for by the decrease in the "young elderly" group and the numbers involved are so small that they hardly constitute a threat to the national economy.

Furthermore, far from being unduly burdened by the number of dependants, both young and old, there has never been a time when the ratio of people of working age has been so high. It is hardly the fault of the children or the old people if we cannot better manage our affairs to ensure that more of the "workers" are actually in employment.

Far from being a burden on health and social services, the facts are that over 90 per cent of elderly people live and die in their own homes, making no more than marginal extra demands on their general practitioners, who receive an extra allowance for their trouble. It is only a small minority who seek or need specialist care in hospital or an old people's home or even sheltered

Buried treasure From Dr Mansel Spratling

Sir, I should like to reinforce the concern expressed (July 16 and 23) at the loss of invaluable scientific information entailed by the finder's refusal to disclose precisely where in south Buckinghamshire, apparently near Hambleden, he found the two Iron Age harness trappings which he sold through Sotheby's on July 11. Even after two centuries and more of discovery we possess remarkably few data for the formulation - let alone testing - of hypotheses about why some bronzes were eventually buried rather than, as was usual in Iron Age Britain, consigned to the crucible. Metrical data suggest that the so-called Hambleden pieces constituted a whole hoard, but the finder's intransigence precludes certification even of this simple

We should not be shocked at the high price paid for the better preserved Hambleden trapping. Prices for like pieces have been rising for some time and reflect both their scarcity on the open market and eventual international recognition of the high regard in which many prehistoric British artefacts have been held by archaeologists and the museum-going public.

Given, moreover, the existence world wide of institutions able to pay high prices, no fiscal change by HM or any other government such as Mr Selkirk advocates (July 23) is likely significantly to depreciate the international valuation of British antiquities.

I doubt the desirability of trying to prevent the export of the trapping bought by a Continental dealer, for it is no Iron Age "Contradiction. Oberon and Titania." Export would create no dangerous precedent, for British antiquities have long been sold abroad, as diversely as to Australia, California and Canada. Nor do I see why they should not be. Do we not, after all, continue to stuff our own museums and art galleries with the cultural heritage of other nations?

Yours faithfully, MANSEL SPRATLING Wolfson College, Cambridge.

On the other side of farming fence

From Mr Michael Saunders Watson Sir, For the third time in three months you have published an article highly critical of the arable farmer. There was the double act of Richard Body and Lord Melchett in April, then there was your leader on oilseed rape (May 30) and now we have David Hart (feature, August 2).

You may have balanced these with an article giving the opposite viewpoint, but if so I am afraid I missed it and all three are so subjective, their facts so overstated, that the impression given to an uninformed reader must by now be that all arable farmers are hell-bent on destroying the countryside at the taxpayers' expense.

I am an arable farmer and I have removed hedges to create field sizes of 50 acres or so in order to allow the most efficient use of my equipment. I have, however, planted many hundreds of trees in field corners and hedgerows to compen-sate and no hedge has been removed potential volunteer than as a without the most careful consideration of the effect on the overall shape of the landscape.

Similarly, it is untrue to suggest that relatives care less than they used to. The truth is that more I hate those palls of smoke clouding a summer sky, but I, too burn straw because I have to remove the surplus I cannot sell and to disinfect the field before cultivation. By using these techniques we have May I suggest that a more doubled our yield in the past ten years. We had to do this to stay in appropriate role for the politicians, rather than making old people feel a burden and their relatives guilty, business, as in the latter half of the 1970s prices so lagged behind costs would be to concentrate on provid-ing relief services for the elderly. They want nothing more than to that it was only by increasing yield that we were able to keep going. Nineteen eighty-two reversed this retain their independence and their trend, however, and we have been families will fare much better if they able to re-equip properly for the first time in eight years in preparation for a leaner future.

There is an alternative, which is to remove the support from agriculture and allow world markets to operate. We should then be competing with the vast American prairie system of low input and low output farming. The ensuing loss of hedgerows would only be equalled by the loss of jobs.

this to include the provision of Planning controls might prevent numerous facilities to the management which the NGA machine the former, if they were imple-mented quickly enough, but it would be the end of the British cereal farmer. We should return to the The additional £7 referred to position of the 1930s, when most of above is in respect of minor matters our food was imported and much not covered by the mediator's land would be left derelict. The recommendation, which we had always envisaged as involving a cost poppies would flourish once more and Mr Hart would be happy until one day he found there was no bread in the shops.

Most farmers are conscious of the need to balance conservation with production, but there is a danger that if the present outcry continues unabated they may be driven to desperate measures to protect their position. The situation described as the norm by Mr Hart could well become a reality, in which case, heaven help us! There are two sides to this question, therefore, and both need to be heard if we are to maintain food production without destroying the countryside.

Yours faithfully, MICHAEL SAUNDERS WATSON Rockingham Castle, Market Harborough, Leicestershire.

August 2.

From Mr W. F. de Salis Sir, David Hart's shrill diatribe (feature, August 2) on the influence of the farming lobby misses the point because he fails to record the views of the general public. A recent public opinion poll conducted by the British Market Research Bureau showed that 75 per cent of people believe that farmers and lando do a good job looking after the countryside.

Despite changes in farming methods, the public still rank the landscape and scenery top of their list in the benefits which people get from the countryside. They would not have done this if farmers and landowners had ruined the country-

There is, of course, a need for major changes in the common agricultural policy. Hopefully British politicians will work towards changes which will ensure the continuing prosperity of British agriculture. British food can provide more employment between farmgate and the housewife's shopping basket than can food imported from our European neighbours.

It is surely time that political commentators in Britain changed their craft from one of knocking success stories to one which applauds them. Yours faithfully,

Mole among hounds

From the Chairman of the British Field Sports Society

Sir, On August 2 The Times gave prominence ("Spectrum") to a report about a man who served a nine-month prison sentence for desecrating the grave of the legend-ary huntsman, John Peel, and who has been following hunts with a camera to record their activities on behalf of the League Against Cruel Sports. When Peel's grave was vandalised his bones and those of his relatives were scattered around the church precincts and an obscene message left behind.

That those who direct the League Against Cruel Sports can give credit to such a man or to such trickery may be no surprise to the many country people who suffer from their activities but it must be asked whether bona fide sympathisers can still believe in this organisation. Mr Huskisson/Wright/Wilkins - or whatever his current cover name may be - has at least done a public service by demonstrating the fact. Hunts are open to all comers and it is absurd to say they have been infiltrated". People who follow the hounds are accepted in good faith. Country sportsmen have nothing to hide and if those responsible offend against the accepted code of conduct they may expect to suffer for it. If their opponents have a case at law why do they not bring it instead of parading such duplicity?

The Director of the League Against Cruel Sports was reported yesterday (August 3), again in The Times, as ready to re-employ Mr Huskisson whom he had previously referred to as "the best undercover agent we've ever had".

In an overwhelmingly urban society country sportsmen must face matter.

From Sir Frederick Lawton Sir, Your summary (July 29) of Mr Walter Merricks's article in a recent issue of the New Law Journal associated the Senate of the Inns of Court with a proposal which I put before the Advisory Committee on Legal Education at its last meeting.

The Bar is not, and in my professional lifetime has never been, concerned to exclude anyone with the wrong background, the wrong accents or the wrong faces; but it may want to exclude those who have the wrong attitudes to the law, the courts and cheuts.

What the Bar is concerned with is training those who have the right qualities for practice. Training Wednesday's leading article on Yugosla-that Albanians make up a facilities are limited. The Senate has the task of deciding how to select the applicants for entry who have the best chance of succeeding in a profession which gives big rewards to the few who succeed and little to the majority who do not. The universities and polytechnics will probably have to help with the selection of entrants. My proposal was that the help might best be given in a standard form of report which commented on an applicant's qualities which were relevant to practice. Academic ability is one quality but many outstanding examinees fail in practice whilst others who scraped through their examinations become leaders of their profession.

What does matter is an ability to express oneself well, both orally and in writing. Accents are irrelevant. Many accents are used by harristers. Lord Denning's Hampshire burr and the late Mr Justice Swift's Lancas-trian vowels were no handicap to them. An entrant to the profession who cannot get on with the other members of his chambers or establish a rapport with his clients is likely to fail - and those who come from wealthy and influential backgrounds often have difficulty in this respect

Somehow those responsible for selecting entrants to the School of Law will have to identify those with the requisite qualities. They are to be found in students from varying social and financial backgrounds. It is a myth that the Bar is recruited from the moneyed classes. I did not come from them, nor did many of my friends at the Bar and on the Bench.

Holy Land prophet preaching silence

Nationalism is at present having full play in Israel, but many Israelis believe that other ideas are meant to determine their country's policy. It should be "playing its part as a people of the Covenant and as the instrument for bringing the nations together". This is the conviction of André Chouraqui. who speaks like a modern prophet to his fellow-country-men, Jewish, Christian and Muslim whose inspiration comes from the historic legacy of the Holy Land.

Chouraqui originates from Algeria, where his family had been established for several centuries, since being expelled from Spain. His ancestral beliefs were destroyed in the atheistic atmosphere of the Lycee, but his faith was rekindled by young nurses who were Protestants, during a time in hospital for a polio operation, and by professors at Paris whose understanding of the Judaic heritage was so much also from Muslims, especially reaching aims? A personal experience convinced Chouraqui that the way is to be found through silence.

My spirit became more and more attentive to the contemplation of In these times, when the the Creator. so receptive, that I could attain the silence of the mind: to stop in myself the flow of ideas and of images that made a screen between my own tumult and the uncreated ocean of silence. There, sometimes I felt such a powerful communion that it ended by conquering my poor humanity. It certainly seemed then that, in the quiet knowledge of my nothingness. I experienced the nothingness. I experienced the sovereign presence of a personal God of unity and love.

His conviction is that silence should forge regenerated humanity.

"We must find men to build the new world. We must found a new order whose roots would reach down into the still living depths of Israel, Christianity and Islam. Council out of touch, Runcie says

Vancouver (Reuter) - A wide gap exists between the World Council of Churches and "ordinary Christians in the pew", the Archbishop of Canterbury, Dr Robert Runcie, said in Vancouver.

Average church members were more concerned with personal faith and morals than with the council's high-level moves for religious unity or programmes for social change, he told Reter on Thursday.

Dr Runcie, who is in Vancouver at the head of the Church of England's delegation to the council's governing assembly, said the council's occasionally controversial cal group was seen as out of touch by the average churchgoer. There was "less coolness" about the Anglican Chuch taking part in the council than two years ago, but the archbishop noted that he would have to give an account of the council's assembly actions when the Church of England's synod meets in November.

Representatives from about 300 Protestant, Orthodox and Anglican churches with about 400 million members are attending the assembly, which ends on August 10. Dr Runcie said it rengined to be seen whether the will of the 800 delegates to the assembly would be carried out during the 18-day meeting or whether the council's pronouncements and programmes would merely be a "predetermined" reflection of what the council staff wanted

It would be interesting to see how far the real spirit of the assembly comes through

Noting that the assembly was the first he had attended, Dr Runcie seemed to be a greater emphasis on worship and theology as a counter balance to the council's widely publicized identification with radcal social activism. He said the council's more controversial actions and statements had "sometimes appeared to be the only thing the world council

Gilts encountered selling as the pressure for an increase in US interest rates grew. But by the close earlier losses of up to 50p had given way to gains of 25p as fears that the Government Broker was planning to announce a new issue rapidly evaporated. Most of the speculation appeared to emanate from the Futures market.

US jobless rate in sharp fall to 9.5%

The United States unemployment rate fell to 9.5 per cent in July as nearly 500,000 Americans found jobs, the Labour Department reported here.

Last month's reduction from June's 10.0 per cent underscored the steady progress in reducing national unemploy-ment that has taken place since the severe recession ended last year. Then, the unemployment rate was at a post-war high of 10.8 per cent.

Unemployment has not fallen by as much as half a percentage point in a single month for many years. Total employment increased 499,000 to 101.3 million last month.

A White House official called the Labour Department's report about takeover of the subsidi-"outstanding" and added: ary.

to Wytch Farm If Mrs Thatcher's first four years taught this Government anything about privatization, it was surely that converting simple manifesto promises into reality is a terribly frustrating, time-comsuming and complicated business. Nowhere has the task proved more sisyphean than with the Government's plans to sell off the British Gas corporation's 50 per cent stake in Wytch Farm, the country's largest onshore off field. It is now more than two years since Mr David Howell, then Secretary of State for Energy, first announced the Government's intention to sell the asset. Two energy secretaries later, the process has still not been completed, notwithstanding the fact that the department's original deadline for completing the disposal was the end of the 1981/2 financial year (i.e. 16 and a bit months ago).

A buyer has been found in the form of the Dorset Group, a consortium of five independent British oil companies, and the terms of the sale have, after protracted negotiations, finally been approved (by the Government at least, if not by the gas corporation. But once again, the latest deadline for tying up the sale -the middle of last month has come and gone. The betting is that it will be several weeks before the final legal and contractual and Wytch Farm moves into the private sector. It is ironic that the Government's original decision to sell the asset by auction to the oil industry, rather than issue shares to the public, was taken in the belief that it would enable the whole process to be wrapped up more quickly. This calculation has proved to be issues have been settled, startingly misguided. Add to this the fact that British Gas has, by common consent, had much the better of the argument about the wisdom of selling off a proven revenue-earning asset during a buyer's market in oil, and it is no surprise that government minister have long since given up boasting about this particular roll-back of the State frontiers.

City Editor's Comment

The long, hard road

The price the Government will obtain for Wytch Farm - £80m as an initial payment, and £80m later, followed by further small royalty payments if proreaches certain levels - is hardly a princely sum that justifies the hours of effort that have gone into forcing through the sale against the corporation's wishes.

The lessons from the exercise have proved invaluable however in preparing for future privatization.

This is why the Government is handling the pro-posed sale of the corporation's North Sea oil assets differently. From September 1, the assets will be owned and managed directly by the energy department until a share sale or oil industry auction can by arranged. This will probably take the best part of a

Handling the sale itself is common sense, but also somewhat bizarre. For it means that a non-interventionist and privatizing Government will now be actively running, on a dayto-day basis, a business that it believes it should not be in

Meanwhile Tricentol, Carless Capel, Clyde and the other British oil companies in the Dorset group are growing old waiting to get their hands on an asset which will play a key role in determining whether they are to prosper or not in the next few year's tougher oil climate.

Who would have thought that Tricentrol would get quicker service from the Chinese, who are expected to sign an exploration deal with them in the next day or two, than they would from their own Government?.

Phoenix trims losses

Phoenix Timber has anyear prelax losses of £995,000 compared with

£1.2m loss a vear ago. There is no dividend for the third consecutive year, but Mr Alexander Gourvitch, chairman. says trading is profitable

Phoenix has heavily rationaized its business and in the first four months showed £200,000 of profits and a rise in sales of 28 per cent. Sales in the year ended last March rose to £43.5m, from £39.5m the year before.

Other benefits seen in the tinued trading at Dewsbury and Leeds, while two businesses were sold as going concerns. The main importing and trading areas of sheet materials and hardwoods have been rationalized, Mr Gourvitch is confident that the trading recovery will continue and that a satisfactory profit will be carned in the resent year. The board will recommend a dividend when trading profits permit, he says.

mighty never have heard of the Norwegian Coastal Service. Now in its ninetieth year it operates daily between Bergen on the west coast and Kirkenes in the far north, a distance of about 1,200 miles, of which half is within the Arctic Circle. The round trip takes [] days and the ship makes 34 calls in each direction, serving as a long-distance bus and carrying mail. trozen fish and general freight between mainland ports and off-shore islands. The attraction for the discerning tourist is that he can take a round trip mainly in sheltered waters amid the superb scenery of the fjords, without all the brouhaha of a

For the seadog, who loves to arrive in a strange harbour and appreciates skilful pilotage and the niceties of coming alongside an icing sugar dusting of snow, in all weathers, this is a special which lying more thickly in in all weathers, this is a special new and fascinating experience.

Eleven ships maintain the service. We took one of the newest and largest, the Midnatsol under the command of Captain Bard Edvarsen. She is odd to look at, but ships have been getting uglier since they started putting engines in them. Of all-welded construction, she has widely flared bows, slab sides and her upper works are pushed right forward. Above her rail she has four decks surmounted by a "greenhouse" giving an excellent all-round

The after deck is arranged for containers, with space for 40 cars in a hangar beneath. A large crane occupies the middle of this deck, pushing the single rectangular funnel to one side: logical but not pretty. The engines are in the stern under the hanger. The Midnatsol being a very manoeuvrable "high technology" ship, every-thing is controlled from the bridge, a quiet place where an officer in an armchair, wearing bedroom slippers, sits surrounded by controls, knobs and alongside, and the moment she did see some conservation and dials, very much like the flight deck of an aircraft.

The passenger accommoda-tion is excellent. Interior design cabins, with shower, basin and lavatory are roomy for one, reasonable for two, and can take three. Public rooms are comfortably furnished, and a lift makes life easier for the oldies. In the dining room excellent fish is plentiful and well served.

An almost continuous chain of skerries - flat-topped rocks form a breakwater along the coast of Norway, upon which the rollers of the North Sea pound with a constant roar. Inside this barrier the skerries become small islands to which buildings cling like limpets. Then come the larger islands in all shapes and sizes. Our route runs between them and the fjord-indented mainland.

stantly, offering little repose to those who want to see everything. We head for a narrow channel between two islands whose slopes plunge straight into the water. The texture of the rocks varies greatly - some are smooth and benign, others harsh and terrifying in their roughness. The view opens out into a wide fjord with distant mountains, then closes again to form another narrow channel, flanked by Bath bun shaped islands where scattered houses crouch in sheltered bays.

In April most low peaks have treat, and for land-lubbers, a crevices creates a striped black and white effect. Colours generally are sombre - grey, black and brown in varied Later everything will be green with birch trees. Always when the view opens out there is a distant panorama of jagged and smooth white mountains where the shadows are blue. In the taneously and at top speed, the evening the white snows change to pink in the setting sun.

The scenery in bright sunlight it shone almost all the time is one of immense grandeur which a cloud can turn in an instant to one of menace and foreboding accentuated, per-haps, by the bright red sail of a fishing boat.

Often when the mountain slopes flatten before entering the water there are timber houses, very neat and prim, and traditionally painted in all the pale colours of the rainbow. Fishermen's houses stand on piles at the water's edge with a moored fishing boat alongside.

A red mail van waits, and two men arrive to take the warps. The Midnatsol is laid unload the mail and merchandise. Goods for loading are waiting in stacks. Loading and unloading goes on simultrucks avoiding each other like seagulls on the wing.

A loudspeaker warns that the ship is about to leave. The ramp and gangway are hauled up. warps cast off, one blast on the hooter and we are away. The operation may have taken 20 minutes or two hours, but we are always on time.

Few towns look their best from the docks. Trondheim. Norway's third largest city, is no exception. Warehouses, lorry parks, marshalling yards and general mess keep the ship at arm's length. It is only in the small towns that the quays are close to the centre, and even there, brand new storehouses are replacing the handsome old timber buildings. However we is moored the quay comes to preservation of wooden build-shades depending on the light. lowered from her side and Tromso, where, in sharp conseveral fork-lift trucks hurtle to trast, a huge high-level concrete bridge spans the fjord.

The North Cape was named by the British explorer Richard Chancellor in 1553, and Admiral Lord Fraser took it as his title after the Second World War. It is very large and intimidating; black, precipitous, potentially storm-swept and a thousand feet high. We rounded it slowly and with proper

Many ports were virtually obliterated during the war. Most, like Hammerfest, the world's northernmost town, were rebuilt without imagination. Kirkenes, the turning point of our voyage, where magentite is mined, is another.

As we steam further north the weather has become noticeably colder, though no less brilliant. At Kirkenes a thin film of ice covers the water, with deep snow ashore.

There is however one exception to this lack of imagination Kristiansund, an internal life. An enormous ramp is ings going on, particularly in harbour surrounded by fine timber buildings all painted white or pale green, pink, grey or brown. Although grievously damaged, the town has been rebuilt in the traditional way. The real architecture of the fjords is in the waterside groups of buildings and an occasional church.

The most exciting part of the whole voyage was the homelands. Channels were narrower, banks steeper, precipices more forbidding and mountains more jagged. It was a microcosm of the whole trip which included two of the most interesting harbours and a terrible pong of drying fish at Svolvaer. We were well advised to take our trip early in the season, but a good ship, and otherwise were we were lucky with the weather. We had expected it to be bad. There were only 26 of us on the round trip, but plenty of shorthaul passengers, who seemed to spend their time below. We had the decks to ourselves. If the ship had been full, meals would have been in relays, decks crowded and people in the public rooms sitting on each other's knees.

The real menace came from hordes of rampaging children. On one night passage 300 of them slept (or rather didn't sleep) in halls, alleyways and even the lift. We lashed them with our toneues at 3 am. but to little effect. We reflected that we were there on sufferance for, after all, this was really a bus

The Frames' coach was last year's model: broken clock, thick red tartan seats and fans that could not Cope with the freak London heat. The driver was unsure of the route and needed regular prompting from the guide ("turn left here ... now"). Confidence waned when she grazed a cast-iron bollard in Pall Mall. Billed as a "familiarization tour", it took us no further west than Hyde Park Corner, included 10 nutes driving round the Barbican and stopped only at the Old Curiosity Shop where the curios proved less attractive than the diet Pepsi on offer next door. The commentary was slipshod and occasionally downright misleading. Landseer's 'Monarch of the Glen vas not a reindeer and the National Liberal Club is not the Ministry of Defence. Our guide for the Cityrama tour was a pre-recorded tape in a choice of eight languages. "Great way to learn a new language" the driver told me as he handed me a pair of headphones, but the French lady behind me neither wanted to learn a new language nor hear about London and steadfastly refused her pair. The commentary was wide-ranging though marred by lapses into the banal ("On the right is Beauchamp Place with a character of its own"). The English tanguage tape had alternating male and female voices, their remarks receded by an irritating BEEP. The timing of the commentary was problematic, often referring to sights the everyday mid-afternoon traffic had prevented us reaching or the unexpected lack of vehicles meant we had already passed. "The postal address for Apsley House is No 1, London" hardly seemed appropriate by the time we had arrived at Wilton Place. The royal blue double-decker had a scruffy air, with new maps taped to the floor.

London Transport has devised an imaginative route that comes as a velcome change from the low-gear grind through the West End. In the pace of two hours, it took in the City and Southwark as well as High Street Kensington, Bayswater Road and Sloane Square. The chief complaints were the heat and the difficulty in hearing a respectable if low-key commentary from the back. The coach was clean and, for once, many of the passengers were British. We boarded the boat for Greenwich at Westminster Pier after an oppressive 20-minute wait in the sun. The meal resembled a superior packed lunch; a leg of chicken and a pot of colesiaw followed by trifle, eaten to a background of Sinatra ballads.

problem of finding a suitable dolls' house for his small daughter, Alexandra, Dr Andreas Papadakis, Editor of Architectural Design magazine, tried the toyshops and did not like what he saw. He lit on the novel plan of inviting the architects of the world to compete in designing one for her. For Stage 1 in 1981 contestants submitted drawings and intentions. The interest was amazing. A total of 260 entries was submitted. Of these 50 were selected to prepare an actual model and 20 other renowned architects were also invited to join the competition. The finished entry, fascinatng though it is, does not always convince that all the designers had children in mind. Some patterns are very sophisticated and transform the whole idea of the traditional dolls house. They are in a tradition dating from the seventeenth century when wealthy patrician ladies in Europe assembled their pre-cious collections of miniatures in rooms with tiny, fashionable wax-doll residents. By the eighteenth century the housing of such collections had progressed to little buildings based on fine mansions of the period: two of the most famous may be seen at the homes where they were originally sited: the doll house at Nostell Priory, near Wakefield, with furniture attributed to Chippendale design: and the Baby House at Uppark, Sussex, made in about 1730. During the Victorian period.

FESTIVALS

Opera first for Rattle

For his third and final year as artistic director of the South Bank Summer Music Festival. which runs from August 14 to 28, Simon Rattle is concentrating on Janacek and Sibelius who he has admired since childhood.

Among the Janacek items is the first public performance in Britain of his opera, Osud. which Rattle describes as "an astonishingly beautiful work." It is being given in a concert version and will be sung in its original Czech. The singers include Eilene Hannan, Felicity Palmer and Dennis Bailey. Rattle is also presenting a project on which he has been working with his orchestra, the City of Birmingham Symphony, for three years: the complete cycle of Sibelius symphonies, Numbers 5, 6 and 7 will make up the final concert in the Royal Festival Hall on August 28.

Other artists appearing at the festival are Jessye Norman, the soprano, who is giving a recital of songs by Richard Strauss: Alfred Brendel, with Mozart's Piano Concerto in B flat; and the Philip Jones Brass Ensemble, whose concert comprises works by Praetonius, Paul Patterson. Handel and Saint-

The current gargantuan tussle for the Aud Mug - as the America's Cup was referred to T. O. M. Sopwith, who callenged unsuccessfully dur-; the 1930s - is fought on the is signers' drawing boards, in tanks and by the stress alysts, builders and sailtakers as much as by the dedicated and highly honed

The extremely high level of competition represented by these two particular events, and h, many others on the international yacht racing calendar, has ensured that both designers and builders are constantly iring new materials and new cut design and constrction

Until a few years ago, both the racing yachtsman and the cruising enthusiast had to rely on little more than eye and hand to get the best out of his vessel. Now, however, the marine electronics industry is presenting more and more interesting technical wizardry.

Glassfibre is now considered an almost "traditional" matcrial for building yachts, yet aminating specifications and vib-structure design continue to he modified and improved. The polyamide fibre Keylar, which is a little less than two thirds the veight of glassfibre, is finding increasing popularity in reinforced resin moulded.

The panel suffiness of flat or thin laminate and the rigidity of internal framing and longitudinals can be improved dramatically by the use of carbon-tibre reinforcement. As the rigidity of hulls has improved, crews have ireen able to take advantage of this and set up their rigs under ingher tension and better

More and more use is being made of hydraulics where carefully controlled adjustments have to be made to the rigging while it is under load. Hydraulies are also often used to work a lifting keel or centre-board and drive the propeller shaft. Sheet and control line handling winches have improved immensely during the past four years. The better quality winches are smooth in operation up from the cluthes of the and ruggedly engineered to \mericans, in the Admiral's accept the high loads that can be applied aboard a modern yacht. Gear ratios are carefully selec-ted so that each task is handled as conveniently as possible: the design engineers do their best to see that wasteful internal friction is kept to a minimum.

Perhaps the greatest boon to sheet handling has been the development of the self-tailing winch. Here the final turn of the sheet around the winch is led around its grooved head which grips the rope as it leads off the drum, so that sufficient friction is generated between the rope and the winch for the latter to haul in the clew of the sail.

It is the sails which provide the motive power, and here the search for improvement is never-ending. The cloth manufacturers experiment constantly and advertise newly developed materials for which they claim improved stability or finish. The surface must be smooth, to keep friction between air and cloth of the sail to a ways of employing them. More minimum in the intrests of and more frequently computers efficiency. Wind-tunnel tests, are pressed into service to sort experience in top competition and the pronouncements of theorists combine to keep the design and construction of sails under constant and vigorous

> While the racing crew are always looking for something that will give their yacht an edge over the opposition, the cruising enthusiast sets considerable store by convenience. Furling headsails, which can just be rolled up like a window blind when not required, have been with us for many years. Latest developments, however, allow sails set aft of the mast to be furled just as easily. The design and construction of the handling of the entire rig modern yacht is moving fast becomes very much simplified enough, yet it seems but a and the yacht can be sailed snail's pace compared with comfortably by a young or what amounts to an explosion short-handed crew. Cyclamen

One of the most popular house plants is the cyclamen, which is not expensive to buy and, as long as it is given the right conditions, will be as good, if not better, for a number of years. Now is the time to look at the cyclamen which have been dried off in the greenhouse. They should have been turned on their sides and by now will be quite dry. Gently remove the dry dead follage attached to the crown of the corm. Knock out the pot, and make sure there is no sign of rot. Earlier this year, in the course of an otherwise savagely critical article on the Chelsea Flower Show, Sir Roy Strong, Director of the Victoria and Albert Museum, singled out for praise the garden sculpture of Simon Verity and what he was the Verity and what he saw as the revival of a dead art through a modern idiom. Rosemary Verey, creator of the garden at Barnsley House in Gloucestershire, responded by importing three works by Verity and allowing him use of her orchard as a showcase. Such action is symptomatic of Rosemary Verey's approach to garden design; she picks the best from each century and weaves each packing next week's London International Festival of Theatre (LIFT '83) there is one welcome return: the Naya Theatre Company from India, one of the great successes of last year's Edinburgh Fringe and mmediately transferred to Riverside Studios. Their new piece, Bahadur Kalarin, opens on Tuesday at the Lyric Hammersmith for a fortnight's season, moving to the Bloomsbury Theatre for a further two weeks from August 23. Unlike the exuberantly comic Charan the Thief seen last year, Bahadur Kalarin is based on a tragic and disturbing folk legen from Chhatisgarh, told to the Naya's director Habib Tanvir by elders in the village of Sorar. An ancient carving there showed a beautiful woman and a man: Bahadur the winemaker and her son. The son killed his father and married 126 women before realizing his mother was the only woman he could love. On this legend, with its vious Oedinal overtones, Habib Tanvir worked with his company of singing and dancing actors. As improvization proceeded, their spontanteous dis-like and criticism of the Oedipus figure softened into

Howard Hawks, who died in 1977, was a hard-nosed Hollywood director who regarded making films as just another job and was the last to claim any artistic pretension. Yet artist he was, not in the Ingmar Bergman sense of using his work to express a deep personal vision but in his ability to take and enrich popular forms and leave his stamp upon them.

Nearly all Hawks's films were genre pictures: they just hap-pened to be among the best of their type. Think of the gangster film and you think of Scarface. the war film and Sergeant York, the screwball comedy and Bringing Up Baby; and has there ever been as good a private eye thriller as The Big

He also made several fine Westerns and it is largely because Hawks directed it that El Dorado (today, BBC1, 7.05-9.10pm) is not just another piece of John Wayne gunslinging with which to while away a dead Saturday evening.

When El Dorado first appeared, in 1966, it tended to be dismissed as an enjoyable if decidedly inferior version of a previous Hawks Western, Rio Bravo; the tired offering of a man near the end of his career. There are certainly similarities between the two films. In each, the basic plot is the defence of a town against outlaws, undertaken by John Wayne with the dubious help of an alcoholic (Dean Martin in Rio Bravo. Robert Mitchum here) and a toothless old gaffer (Arthur Hunnicutt succeeding Walter Brennan).

But the plot is only a framework in which to explore character and motive and it is precisely Hawke's ability to breathe new life into familiar forms that forces El Dorado to be considered in its own right, to be appreciated equally by those who know Rio Bravo down to the last frame and audiences coming to Hawks for the first time.

For the latter, particularly, two more things can be said about Hawks. His constant theme (echoing his own view of his work) is the need for professionals to do their job in tough situations. People in Hawks's films are always asking "Is he good enough?"

The second point concerns
Hawks's style. At first glance, there is none: no dramatic lighting, no fancy camerawork, no fast cutting. A good director. Hawks once said, is someone who does not get in the way. Look more closely, though, and every shot works for the film. Art may be concealing art but it · Such shameful subscryience to youth and overworked businessmen is bad enough at home, but to elect to continue with it on holiday smacks of masochism. Hence the decision to be selfish: to seek the sun at full blast, hotels with staff and room service - and blow the rest of them.

Spring turned to summer before we studied the brochures. All the hotels abroad we liked (or could afford) were désolé but fully booked. The prospect of stand-bys and bucket-shop flights did not please; then there was the dog, for whom we could find no temporary minder at the right time. We had left it too late. The heatwave arrived and like most phlegmatic Britons, we vearned for a cooling breeze. We found it one day on a day trip on a canal, phut-phutting upstream . . .

Conspiratorial glances were exchanged as they brought me, hubbles and ice and insisted I lay on the roof watching the sky. No prizes for guessing where the galley slave will be in a week's time. She has exchanged a vast converted dairy for a narrow boat, a double bed for bunks and a rocky coastline for the riverbank. And she only has herself to blame. She is also, as she writes, sending off for the brochures for remote Mediterranean islands and getting a cast-iron commitment for dogminders - for next year.

Theoretically four spades, I suppose, but my choice was influenced by two psychological considerations. First of all my charming hostess would doubtless construe three spades as a strong bid and raise me to game on minimal values. If North had the balance of strength, she would have to bid at an uncomfortable level. Obviously, I intended to double any opposition contract, hoping to > Anyone who doubts the influence of television may be converted by this story, which I am assured is true: One day a stranger arrived at a bridge club and asked if he might play. "I haven't played before", he admitted modestly, "but I think I've learned enough from watching Grand Slam to give it a go." As the stakes were minimal, the stranger was allowed in. On the first hand, the stranger's partner bid one club, the next hand passed, and the stranger, after a pause, said: I have 10 points, and two fourcard red suits. It is normal to respond one diamond, but because of the texture of my hearts...'

The long, hard road to Wytch Farm

If Mrs Thatcher's first four years taught this Govern-ment anything about privatization, it was surely that converting simple manifesto promises into reality is a terribly frustrating. time-comsuming and complicated business.

Nowhere has the task proved more sisyphean than with the Government's plans to sell off the British Gas corporation's 50 per cent stake in Wytch Farm. the country's largest on-shore oil field. It is now more than two years since Mr David Howell, then Secretary of State for Energy, first announced the Government's intention to sell the asset. Two energy secretaries later, the process has still not been completed, notwithstanding the fact that the department's original deadline for completing the disposal was the end of the 1981/2 financial year (i.e. 16 and a bit months ago). A buver has been found in the form of the Dorset Group, a consortium of five independent British oil companies, and the terms of the sale have, after protracted negotiations, finally been approved (by the Government at least, if not by the gas corporation. But once again, the latest deadline for tying up the sale the middle of last month has come and gone. The betting is that it will be several weeks before the final legal and contractual issues have been settled.

and Wytch Farm moves into the private sector. It is ironic that the Government's original decision to sell the asset by auction to the oil industry, rather than issue shares to the public, was taken in the belief that it would enable the whole process to be wrapped up more quickly. This calculation has proved to be startingly misguided.

Add to this the fact that British Gas has, by common consent, had much the better of the argument about the wisdom of selling off a proven revenue-earning asset during a buyer's market in oil, and it is no surprise that government minister have long since given up boasting about this particular roll-back of the State frontiers.

The price the Government will obtain for Wytch Farm - £80m as an initial payment, and £80m later, followed by further small royalty payments if production reaches certain levels - is hardly a princely sum that justifies the hours of effort that have gone into forcing through the sale against the corporation's

The lessons from the exercise have proved invaluable however in preparing for future privatization.

This is why the Government is handling the proposed sale of the corporation's North Sea oil assets differently. From September 1, the assets will be owned and managed directly by the energy department until a share sale or oil industry auction can by arranged. This will probably take the best part of a

Handling the sale itself is common sense, but also somewhat bizarre. For it means that a non-interventionist and privatizing Government will now be actively running, on a dayto-day basis, a business that it believes it should not Meanwhile Tricentol, Carless Capel, Clyde and the other British oil companies in the Dorset group are growing old waiting to get their hands on an asset which will play a key role in determining whether they are to prosper or not in the next few year's tougher oil climate. Who would have thought that Tricentrol would get quicker service from the Chinese, who are expected to sign an exploration deal with them in the next day or two, than they would from their own Govern-

Unit trusts soar in Australia

It was stock markets on the other side of the world which put up the best performance last month. The Australian Metals & Minerals index ended July 11. 3 per cent higher, slightly ahead of the rise recorded by the All Ordinary Index. Reflecting this jump, all but one of the industry's unit trusts specialising in Australia scored an offer price gain of 10 per cent or

Leading the contingent was Lawson Australian and Pacific with a rise of 18.3 per cent. some 2 per cent ahead of Gartmore Australian, which had previously been one of the back markers in this year's overall league table.

Much of the recent rise in Australian share prices has been attributed to renewed overseas interest in the stock market there. Investors are anticipating that the world economic recovery will mean increased demand for the country's natural re-sources. Another positive factor has been the Australian Bureau of Agriculture's forecast of a major recovery in the rural sector, which has suffered badly from recent droughts.

Still overhanging the Australian metals and minerals sector is the prospect of the new Labour Government's proposed resources tax.

Buckmaster & Moore, stock-brokers, have warned their private clients against underestimating what the administration may have in mind." While the Labour Government of Mr Hawke is demonstrating a much more pragmatic approach to business than was the case in Gough Whitlam's day, the administration, mindful of the vawning budget deficit, will want to exact its pound of flesh. Gold mining companies, which in the past have escaped the tax uct, could prove quite hard hit."

Another market to put up a strong performance last month was Hongkong's. The Hang Seng index notched up an 11.2 per cent gain on bullish expectations of the outcome of the recent talks between the British and Chinese govern-ments on the political future of the colony. A cut in local interest rates also helped sentiment. Britannia Hong Kong Performance mirrored this renewed optimism with an 11.6 per cent offer price rise, and Gartmore Hong Kong was 11 per cent higher.

Higher threshold The minimum balance for new investments in Learnington Spa's Lion Share account has been increased from £500 to £1,000. Interest is paid annually at a variable rate of 8,75 per cent set. at a vertable rate of 8.75 per cent mar, equivalent to 12.5 per cent gross for basic rate taxpayers, Withdrawal is subject to 30 days' written notice without penalty or is available on request with 30 days' loss of interest.

Aiming for youth

In an attempt to woo young savers, Barcleys Bank has launched a Super

The savers also receive a colour magazine three times a year with competitions and special offers. But the interest rate, however, is the normal bank deposit rate of 6 per cent - ordinary share accounts with any building society offer 7.25 per cent, and extra interest accounts, 8.25 per cent.

High interest share

Argyte Building Society has issued a new high interest income share offering 1.6 per cent above the society's normal investment share rate. At present this amounts to 9.1 per cent per annum - equivalent to 13 per cent gross for a basic rate taxpayer and is paid on the last working day of each month direct into the investor's bank account. Minimum withdrawals of £500 can be amde with no loss of interest subject to 60 days' notice. The minimum investment is 25,000 and the maximum 230,000 or

Claim form change

E60,000 for joint holdings.

Guardian Royal Exchange has revised its motor claims form to cater for policyholders who wish to report an accident for information only. The new form includes notes in red to help the policyholder, and GRE points out that the completion of the claim form, for information only, does not affect your nociaims bonus.

The changes have been made as a result of representations made by The Insurance Ombudsman, who has been faced with an increasing number of complaints about insurers satiling third party claims without consulting their policyholders. This results in a reducion of no-claims bonus.

Jobs abroad guide

With work difficult to find, more and more people seem to be looking overseas if the number of guides on the subject is any indication. Yet another booklet on the problems of working abroad comes from the institute of Chartered

Employment Abroad - A Guide to the Tax Problems is a general guide to the tax difficulties which are likely to be faced by a British executive embarking on a

Signal action

Mr John Potter, coordinator of the Signal Life Investors Action Group which represents the interests of those unfortunate investors who lost money in the collegee of Signal Life, has been talking to Mr Alex Fletcher, Minister of State for Consumer Affairs.

"The Minister is very concerned about the Signal affair and is encouraging us to proceed with our test cases against the intermediaries who sold these bonds", Mr Contex said. Mr Potter said.

We Potter said.
Next landmark in the Signal affair is the meeting of the Committee of Inspection on Thursday at the offices of the liquidator, Mr Gerry Weiss, of Cork Gully. Mr Potter will be representing the interests of investors at the meeting.

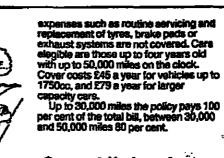

Car repair cover

Car repair bills can be a headache particularly since they tend to be unexpected and unbudgeted for.
The Automobile Association has an interesting new insurance package which gives cover for replacement parts costing more than £75.

Available only to drivers who insure with the AA, Autoparts Plan will cover unexpected repairs to engine, gearbox, suspension, brakes or steering. Planned

Crown Life bond

There is a lot be said for certainty, and guaranteed income bonds offer a fixed income over a given period. Latest available from Crown Life is a four-year bond paying 8.75 per cent net of basic rate tax. Minimum investment is 21,000 and capital is returnable in full at the end of the four-year term. There are no age restrictions.

Wealth warning

Sunderland and Shields Building Society is offering 1.75 per cent above the ordinary share rate on its new two-year term shares available from September 1. At current interest rates, this amounts to 9 per cent not, equivalent to 12.86 per ser cent rist, equivalent to 12.00 per cent gross for basic rate taxpayers. But be warned, if you want to get your money out, you will have to give three months' notice and lose three months' interest.

Gift ceiling

Anxious to encourage small severs to invest in gitts, National Savings has increased the maximum daily purchase of gits listed on the National Savings Stock Register. From September 1, anyone buying stock on the National Savings Stock Register will be able to invest up to £10,000 in any particular stock on any day. The existing limit is £5,000.

Cheitenham success

nam & Gloucester Building society has had such a good response to its Cheltenham Gold Account, paying 8.25 per cent, no strings attached for investments of £1,000 or more, that it has been able to carry on lending – not only to existing members but also to non-members.

"Not only have we been able to offer mortgages to our existing savers and borrowers, with a minimum of delay, but we have also helped many non-members through our branch network and through allocations made to housebuilders allocations made to nousebulders throughout the country. On present trends we anticipate we will be able to maintain a high level of lending in the months ahead" confirms C & G's managing director Mr Andrew Longhurst. If you are having trouble getting a mortgage, Cheltenham & Gloucester branches might be worth a try.

Insurance

Covering the student risk

Certain categories of people are considered bad risks as far as the insurance world is concerned - journalists, deep sea divers and actors are all viewed with a jaundiced eye. High on this list come students who are believed by the industry to be prone to motorcycle accidents, personal mishaps generally, and not least of all, a high incidence of loss of personal belongings. As a result, students often have difficulty getting insurance cover. Barclays Bank has just come up with a new insurance package as part of its Student Survival Kit but it looks expensive compared with the two main alternatives on the market. It is only available to students opening an account with Barclays.

The table shows cover offered by the three main contenders in this field. Barclays premium of £25.50 per annum is the highest by a long way though there is a fo discount on the first halfyearly instalment and the premium thereafter is fixed at £25.50 for the duration of the student's course.

Endsleigh (the student in surance broker) seems to offer the best package unless you happen to live in central London, Liverpool or Manchester, when the Harrison Closer to home, Wall Street Beaumont policy will work out recorded a new peak last slightly cheaper. Endsleigh charmonth.

On the other hand, for £17 a year, Harrison Beaumont offers higher personal belongings cover at £1,750 than the other two and could be a better bet for the student with a lot of expensive hi-fi equipment, cameras and the like.

All three policies give cover when the student is at home during the holidays, for belong-ings in transit, and for foreign abroad will need extra in- society paying as much as 9 per

Double your

That's the remarkable performance of two out of six "special offer" unit trusts highlighted in our June 1982 Investment Action Report - and our clients were able to invest at a discount! According to Planned Savings Statistics (July 1983), these were the performances of our six recommendations:-

	Value of a £5,900 investment
chnology & Growth reen American Recovery & General Gilt Trust Hume Pacific Special Situations tore UK Smaller Companies Recovery	£10,785 £10,048 £ 7,085 £ 6,655 £ 6,465 £ 6,090

To judge how good these figures are, it's worth remembering that £5,000 invested in a building society over the same period would have earned interest of £345 for a basic rate taxpayer—and even less for a higher rate taxpayer.

To find out what the Investment Action Report is ecommending now, send for your free copy without delay. N.B. It should be remembered that unit values can fall as well as rise. While past riformance cannot necessarily be taken as a guide to the future, the skills of the magement groups involved are clearly well above average.

Jobs aid

Cultivating new business ventures

From little acorns, as they say, mighty oaks will grow. But Ms Marion McLaren of Collier Street village in Kent is hoping that the pots and plants in her new greenhouses will sprout profits when Spenny Lane Nurseries opens for business shortly, courtesy of the Govern-ment's new Enterprise Allowance Scheme.

The scheme has been run for the past year on a pilot basis in several parts of the country and went national this week. It is designed to help the unemployment set up in business on their own. Those with a place on the scheme are paid £40 a week for the first year. And Ms Mcbaren was one of the first at her local Jobcentre in Maidstone on

"Living out in the country, starting a nursery seemed a sensible thing to do as I have quite a bit of land attached to my house", she says. "And I could work from home, which is an advantage when you have young children. Over the past few weeks I have been busy building-up stocks of bedding plants and organizing the greenhouses in the hope that I can sign-on the scheme."

Allowance Scheme, you have to fulfil a number of conditions. You must be on unemployment or supplementary benefit when you apply, and have been out of work or under notice of redundancy for 13 weeks. You musy show you have £1,000 to keeping and all the other things

Mr Barry Phillips, the organizer in Ms McLaren's area, says: The McLaren's area, says: "The pilot scheme we had in the Medway Towns last year had fall-out rate of between 13 and 16 per cent - much lower than the normal failure rate for new businesses. Officials do not sit in judgment on the commercial viability of a venture. It's first come, first served for those who

Rubber price's rapid rise sets a market poser

After languishing in the doldrums for nearly two years. rubber is bouncing back. In-deed, the advance in the price over the past six months has been so rapid as to bring it within striking distance of the point at which the buffer stock manager must sell under the International Rubber Agree-

Whether that will happen is a poser for the market, not least because the manager's stock of 270,000 tonnes could have a depressing effect.-

The market is normally quiet at this time of year. But in the last two months the spot London Price of RSS 1 has gone up by 10p a kilogramme to almost 83p. The September price is around 1p more. This means that rubber is over the "may sell" level of 240 Malaysian cents a kilogramme.

The buffer stock manager has indicated that he might sell half way between the "may sell" price and the "must self" price of 249 cents.

Not only has the market's capacity to absorb selling from the stockpile improved; senti-ment has also been considerably cheered by the thought that a buyer may be waiting in the wings in the American strategic stockpile, which recently said that it wanted a big increase in its rubber holdings.

Many market experts view this cautiously since the stockpile will have to get the funds from Congress, and this is easier said than done. But an interesting new light has been cast on the situation by the floating of the idea by Datuk Paul Leong. Malaysia's Primary Industries Minister, that buffer stock rubber could be swapped for some of the American tin with which the stockpile is oversupplied. Malaysia, which also dominates tin, would be prepared to hold this American tin.

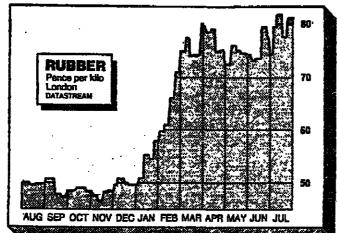

The key to the recovery which has seen the rubber price rise 50 per cent since the beginning of the year is higher vehicle production. About 70 per cent of rubber goes into res. Thus demand from the United States has been substantially better in recent months.

Tough first game for Kent side

Kent Invicta, the Maidstone based Rugby League side, open their second division season against Cardiff City on Sunday, August 21 (3 p.m.).
The Rugby League's newest team, could hardly have wanted a tougher start to their first season, for Cardiff, who are expected to challenge strongly for the title, scored a convincing victory over Fulham, the second division champions, at Stamford Bridge in their last Match On the occasion, it was Cardiff's forward strength that told, and that suggests that Kent's newly as-sembled pack will face a stern examination in their first match. Fulham begin their second attempt to hold on to a place in the first division a week later on August 28 against Featherstone Rovers, winners of last season's State Express Challenge Cup, at Craven Cottage (3 p.m.). Rugby League supporters in the south east, could have divided loyalties next season, however, for the Rugby League have been unable to ensure that Fulham and Kent Invicta's home fixtures do not clash. On at least 10 occasions next season, the two will play home matches on the same day.

Los Angeles (Agéticies) - 10m Watson, the Open champion, was in danger of missing the cut at the Riviera Country Club after an opening round of 75, which included two sevens, on Thursday in the United States PGA championship. Hall Sutton fired seven himiliarly lead by one studies on 65 birdies to lead by one stroke on 65. Scott Simpson and Buddy Whitten, a club professional, was equal second on 66 while Nick Faldo, of Great Britain, on 74, had trouble with his putting and later complained that the course had been watered too heavily.

Faldo said that the water had softened the greens and added: "It changed the course completely - we might just as well have set off without any practice rounds." Faldo, an early starter, left several putts short on a day that began with in early mist before the sun broke

One of Watson's sevens came at the second bole, a par four, where he incurred a penalty stroke for hitting the ball twice when attempting to strike it left handed from a difficult position in the rough at the foot of a tree. He has yet to win the PGA and burden of a stiff neck.

Sutton, whose target this year is to finish among the top five money winners, was pleased with his putting. "It was as good as its been all year," the former amateur champion said. He gained four birdies in a spell of some holes from the eleventh, and his only blemish came at the fifth where he buried his drive in the rough. His opinion of the course differed from Faldo's. He said: "It's in great shape - I don'

know if we can play on a better one.

Look-alike triumph for Elvis

From Mitchell Platts

Glenn Ralph bears a striking be brutally honest, it is his rock star catures rather than his golfing attributes for which he is immediately known on the circuit. That was until yesterday, when on the wind-swept seaside links of Kennemer, he discovered a repertoire of shots quite out of character to take a stranglehold on the £80,000 Dutch Open, sponsored by KLM. His second round of 65 equalled the course record and gave the 27-year-old from Bognor Regis a halfway total of 131, 13 under par.

Ralph has been a professional for ten years. In that time, apart from a short flirtation with the top of the leaderboard in the Open champion ship at Muirfield three years ago, he has spent his life in the backwaters of the game. He has never managed a top 20 finish, never won a four figure cheque and this season he is No 187 in the European official money list — with £347. Life has been made bearable because of the generous sponsorship he receives from the Withans Motor Company of Banstead, and the devotion of his girlfriend Denise, to whom he plans

Will Ralph find himself walking up the isle in the near future? There up the isle in the near future? There can be little doubt that, in spite of his four stroke lead over the Australian Wayne Grady (70), it will not be an easy task to win. It is not hard to sprinkle shots away on this course; Sandy Lyle twice strayed a few feet from the fairways, and was negatived with unplayable lies. With penalized with unplayable lies. With a score of 77 for a total of 148, he failed to beat the guillotine.

To his credit, Ralph stayed on the To his credit, Ralph stayed on the straight and narrow all the way round the 6,834 yard course, on which the grass had been finally trimmed down to a respectable length, and he gathered seven birdies and one eagle. There was much to admire about his game. The six-iron that he drilled into ten feet for his eagle at the 500 yard sixth; the drive and two-iron with which he reached the long eleventh; then, in a fine finish, the wedge that he struck from a 121 yards at the then, in a me man, the wenge that he struck from a 121 yards at the eighteenth, the ball landed 15 inches from the cup and he joyously tapped Dasriaux said this decision was not at - would you believe it? with the fact that some countries have not yet named the event in which their athletes are to be entered and would not indeed do so until today.

"The smaller countries have to be looked after", said Dasriaux, rather as the headmistress at a kindergarten would announce that Jennifer will, after all, be permitted to take part in the egg-and-spoon race on sports day, even though she has been absent for most of the term with measles. Sentiment, at this level, has no part in championships. Athletics is now professional, at the instigation of the IAAF, in all but name. If these are world championships for the benefit of athletes rather than officials, which has to be questioned, then they must be run as a professional ship. That means no stowaways, who are here simply as appeasement to political influences, in the Third World and elsewhere. You do not find grace-and-favour entries lining up on the grid in Formula One events at Monaco or

A lamentable comment here on over half of the men's singles entries as Wimbledon, that is because they are there on merit, which is how it ought to be.

The inaugural world champion-The imagural world champion-ships have already lost some of their credibility by excluding many of the top 10 in the world in their particular events. If the Americans more like eight as it happens - and Britain five of the top 1,500 metres rumers, and the Soviet Union and Finland the majority of the best

Samaranch not at all alarmed

Heisinki (AP)- Juan Antonio Samaranch yesterday dismissed suggestions that the world chammay lessen the importance of the Olympic Games. The Spanish President of the International Olympic Committee said at a Press "We regard conference: "We regard these championships as one of the most championships as one of the most important sports events in the world. They will not undermine the importance of the Olympic Games. On the contrary, I think the Olympics will become more important than ever, because track and field will be more important."

they should all be here, on the basis of an equivalent to the ATP ranking computer in tennis.

The absurdity of the recent British selection controversies in the 300 and 1,500 - and the fact that Britain may now be running one short in both if Graham Williamson falls by the wayside like Coe would be eliminated by really severe qualifying performances, the achievement of which automatically entitles the athlete to a place in the championships.

World championships should not be about charity, and any country found to have falsified the qualifying performance of an athlete event of the year, with competitors such as Carl Lewis, Steve Cram, Jurgen Hingsen, Evelyn Ashford, and May Decker striving for sporting immortality. Yet, before the first event has begun, it is a constant that first event has begun, it is apparent that far more vigorous discipline is required in two important areas apart from qualifying performances drug abuse and physical foul play in lane-free track

We cannot judge just what influence on the championships illegal drugs will have, though it is probable that it will be greater in the women's events than in the men's due to the recent development in the use of testosterone, the male hormone. What is certain is that until the IAAF introduce computsory random testing - not least in the United States, where abuse it rife - on every country's athletes by an independent source, in any month of the year, the sport will continue to be corrupted and the athletes exploited.

With ferociously high standard probable in both the 800 and 1,500 metres, it will be interesting to see whether the authorities are prepared to take the ultimate and only sanction of disqualification against those who gain notical advantage by blatant use of the arms. This increasing practice was evident in the Moscow Olympics: it has steadily been worsening since Willi Wilbeck gave Schastian Coc a Rugby hand-off in the 1977 European Cup here, without

Ron Clarke, the former recordbreaker from Australia, who never won a major championship gold medal, is one of those appalled by contemporary tactics. He says: It astonishes me these days in spon that we deprecate those who play within the rules and elevate the rough and tough characters like lan Botham, Harvey Smith, John McEnroe and Ian Chappell, Why don't we make people suck to the rules? Some athletes seem to have no consideration for others. When Over pulled up in the AAA 800 final at Crystal Palace, he made no attempt to pull off the track, and obstructed McGeorge behind him. I

Willie Carson can win the promise when he finished third especially when one appreciated that Quick Work and Millbow, the two who beat him that day, have not been beaten since.

Prince of Princes (7.50) and Little Mercy (8.20) are other likely winners at Lingfield. "You can tip her to win her next race too; she's in tremendous form at the moment." Those were John Winter's words after Little Mercy had and third in their previous race won at 7-1 at Newmarket eight days ago. So ignore her in the

As for Prince of Princes, he ran really well behind Morgan's Thoice at Ascot recently and Morgan's Choice promptly went on to take the Goodwood Stakes the following week.

resents the current classic cross but he will be meeting Thorndown on nearly a stone worse terms than he would if this were a weight for age handicap and that could prove too much.

At his best, Riberetto looks the most leniently-treated runner in the field, bearing in mind that he did win the Derby Trial at Lingfield two years ago. But a lot of water has passed under the bridge in the meantime and in this instance not only Thorndown but also Balladier, Regal Steel and Jupiter Island have better form to their name. Jupiter Island has been the subject of a gamble to win the Ebor Handicap at York later this month. He will incur a 7lb penalty if he wins now.

Cannot accept Tapping Wood's indifferent effort in the race his appeal against an eight-day suspession for careless riding suspession for careless riding Diamond Day as being a correct picture of his ability. All the more so as he carried the full weight of his stable's confidence that day and started favourite. So it seems only fair to give him to be forfeited. The ban came the benefit of the doubt in the after his mount, Air Distingue Kiwi Stakes.

Having finished second to Chapel Cottage in the Cherry Hinton Stakes on the course at the July meeting, albeit four lengths adrift. Nophe will have a host of followers in the Sweet Solera Stakes. Yet I wonder whether she will manage to give 81b to the very easy Salisbury winner Triagonal, who will be meeting Out Of Shot on much more favourable terms than when they clashed at Sandown. where Out Of Shot won by two lengths.

Colts usually dominate group races but one noteworthy exception is the Group 1 Heinz 57 sponsored Phoenix Stakes, for over the past 17 years only three colts have been successful as compared to 14 fillies, our Irish Racing Correspondent

One change that may see the balance of power altered is the extension of the distance from five to six furlongs, but against that a surprise defection. Hegemony, who was second in the Coventry Stakes at Royal Ascot has weakened the The half dozen colts in today's better of Latin Beat.

I did't expect them to suggest this was a frivolous appeal. It is a very severe sentence for hitting a horse once. The stewards said the horse showed signs of anging to the right before I hit ber. That is why I have been done for careless riding.

We produced veterinary evidence that she couldn't trot the next day. She was very lame behind, and has pulled muscles in her loin. That is why she hung. She didn't show trac form." Carson said.

The committee, chaired by Major General Sir John D'Avidgor-Goldsmid, with Lord Vestey and Mr Brooke Holiday, heard evidence from Carson, who was legally represented, the Goodwood steward Colonel Julina Berry, the steward's secretary, and Steve Cauthen, rider of Gaygo Lady.

· They watched a video recording of the race and also saw a film of the Prix de Diane in France when Air Distingue was hit on the left hand side but did not swerve. They found that Carson had been guilty of careless riding after hitting the filly once on the left hand side.

Ma Biche to thwart the British raiders champion

By Desmond Stoneham, French Racing Correspondent

English and Irish trained horses class of Ma Biche will prove to be are conducting a major raid at narrowly conclusive.

Deauville this weekend and the Vincent O'Brien contests the six visitors should come away with furiongs 110yd Prix Maurice de some of the valuable prize money. Gheest on Sunday with Beaudclaire this afternoon's Group II Prix d'Astarie, to be run over one mile, lan Balding saddles both Mighty Fly Maximova and Altina. and Flamenco and the English team is made up with Octavia Girl and Nibabu. But, the French are strong in this event and are led by the 1,000 Guineas winner Ma Biche, Mysterieuse Etoile, Verria and Ma Biche has not run since beating Royal Heroine and Favo-ridge in the 1,000 Guineas at Newmarket but Criquette Head reports her filly in top condition and just in need of a little competition to sharpen her up for the Prix Jacques le Marois on August 14. The Daughter of Key to the Kingdom must carry a Group One penalty in the race and will, therefore, be giving weight to all her rivals including a trio of four-year-olds. Mystericuse Etoile began her season well enough by taking the Prix de la Grotte and then running second to L'Attrayante in the Poule d'Essai des Pouliches (French 1.000 Guineas). The tiny daughter of Northern Dancer subsequently ran well below form in both the Prix Saint-Alary and Prix de Diane Hermes but was found to be ill after both those Group One events. She is now back to full strength and will no doubt appreciate the probable fast ground and the shorter distance of the d'Astarte.

The best of the English should be Flamenco who was beaten two lengths by Royal Heroine (received 3lb) in the Child Stakes. Flamenco will be receiving 4lb from Ma Biche and on a strict form line through Royal Heroine should be very close to the crack French filly. Mighty Fly is a top class handicapper with wins to her credit this season in the William Hill Lincoln, Whitsun Cup and the Royal Hunt Cup. I expect that the finish of this race to be and I expect Pat Eddery to bring this celt home in front of Pampabird

Finally, the 15 furlong Prix

Kergoriay should go to the veteran Kelbornec who finished second in the same event a year ago Kelbomec has twice beaten the Prix du Cadran winner Karkour this season and should be good enough to hold off Petit Montmorency and Vancana. TODAY

Clerc: voted best player Clerc's run ended by

Indianapolis (AFP and Reuter) -Argentina's Jose Luis Clere dramati-cally withdrew from the United States clay court championships here only hours after being named player of the month by tennis

The 24-year-old player had been on course for his fourth successive tournament title after winning 15 matches in a row since his first round defeat at Wimbledon. But Clere astonished spectators by pulling out of his third mund match with Roberto Arguello, of the United States when he had the with Roberto Arguello, of the United States, when he lost the first set 6-1. He said later he had a heavy cold and was running a temperature. Clere was second seed in the championships and his chances had looked good since the elimination of the top seed José Higueras, of Spain

The women's top seed, Andrea Temesvari, of Hengary, and the defending champion, Virginia Russei, of Romania, the fourth seed, won straight set victories to advance to a semi-final meeting. In the other semi-final, the second seed, Kathy Zing Garrison, the third seed, for

Foster's genuine pace and cool temperament can take him to the top

A year ago he shuffled into Chelmsford cricket ground, an anonymous spectator, noticed only because he was wearing a plaster cast. His back was broken and a promising career scemed to be over, at the age of 20. Today he strides into that same ground recognized by test fast bowling prospect English cricket has produced for

The world of Neil Foster has been transformed because he gambled on a special operation to mend his back which involved the insertion of two six-inch stainless steel plates. They have kept the vertebrae rigid while the broken bones are healing. He has been able to bowl at full pace with no ill effects, and with astonishing class wickets, bowled magnificently in the Benson and Hedges Cup final at Lord's and is on the verge of the England team. All in three months.

"I sometimes think it's all a dream and I'm going to wake up." Foster said. "I was very tentative when I started the season, although I'd trained hard and was very fit. But !. what's amazed me is that apart from a little stiffness after a hard day in the field I have had no reaction. Apart from a little swelling I get no pain.

The scars look sore and red and I omly show them to the doctor!

The operation has been judged a total success and the steel plates will be removed at the end of the season.

"It'll be a relief not to be called 'the man of steel' any more. I just hope I can take as many wickets without the Foster joined Essex from school, and although he obtained 10 O levels he decided to devote all his talents to professional cricket. He graduated from the Essex second team where he was under the watchful eye of the manager. Mike Denness, the former captain of Kent and England.

"I was surprised how quick he was when I first faced him", Denness said. "His pace is deceptive. But what always impressed me most was his action - it's flowing and fluent. He also has the great asset of bowling close to the stumps and he can move the ball into the batsman and away.

"We haven't rushed him, wanting him to complete his and thin to make a classical fast apprenticeship, so it was a bowler, and could have a tremendous blow when he tendency to breakdown. This broke the bone in his back. His theory is dismissed by Denness. comeback is quite unbeliev-

His bowling in the Benson and Hedges final proved the point. His three wickets for 26 in 11 overs and his magnificent run-out of Mike Gatting should have won Essex the trophy.

According to Denniss, his protégé is level-headed and knows exactly where he is going. "He has plenty of ambition, plus an aggressive streak, two highly important attributes for a

After a break this week Foster, said: "I need the rest and time to reflect and catch up on all the mail and do some photography - mostly Essex cricket and country scenes. I'm a country boy at heart!"

One of the letters he has to answer is from Australia. He has been asked to return to play club cricket in Tasmania (he won a Whitbread cricket scholarship there two years ago). He has also been promised a job as a croupier in a casino at Hobart. And a winter in the sun is a

Spencer hopes to clinch world championship

Anderstorp, Sweden, (reuter) -reddie Spencer, the United States of America, could secure the world motorcycle championship in his first full season on Smday by winning the Swedish 500cc grand prix.

Spencer. a 21 year-old from Louisiana who lives up to his nickname "Fast Freddle", leads the championship from Kenny Roberts, his more experience commercial. championship from Kenny Roberts, his more experience compatriol, by two points. With only two events left, a victory worth 15 points would give Spencer an unassailable lead – assuming Roberts finishes out of the points rankings.

That is unlikely to happen, however, Roberts, seeking his fourth world championship, is in brilliant form, having won five grands prix in world championship, is in brilliant form, having won five grands prix in recent weeks to cut back Spencer's early season lead. And the 31 year-old. Roberts, who won the title between 1978 and 1980, wants to win the championship once more If Spencer is unable to secure the title on Sunday, all will hinge on the final round of the championship at San Marino on September 4.

Argentina stay with side who beat Australia

Sydney, Australia (AFP) -Rodolfo O'Reilly, Argentina's rugby union ceach, has retained the team who beat Australia 18-3 in the first international match in Brisbane last weekend for the final international at the Sydney cricket ground

Bob Dwyer, the Australian coach, said that Argentina was a far stronger team than the Scottish side which drew the two international series in Australia last winter, praising the toughness of Argen tina's forwards and the composure of the backs.

This week 43 members and beneficiaries of a crime syndicate went on trial in Szekszard in southern Hungary. Next week dozens more will face a court in Budapest for membership of another syndicate accused of rigging the country's football pools.

This is one of the biggest corruption rackets to be exposed in Eastern Europe: well over 200 people are involved including 196 foot-ball players, a number of allegedly bent referees, team managers and coaches as well as ex-players, car dealers and pillars of Hungarian mercantile respectability.

Hungary is football mad, but unfortunately not football talented. In the summer months there are no first division matches but the Toto - the pools system - has to be kept alive to feed the national hunger for soccer and gam-bling. So the focus shifts to small local teams of indifferent quality.

Six million pools coupons a week are filled out by the Hungarians at five forints a fling which means 30 million forints (about £500,000) rests on the outcome of matches that would not look out of place on a British village common.

Last summer two crime syndicates, one based in Budapest, decided to exploit the situation. Obtaining advance copies of match fixtures each syndicate - run by an illegal brains trust - would sit down and decide which matches to buy.

ha an average week the syndicates would buy 10 matches out of 40 but sway the outcome of another three. That was sufficient to make a killing - after a couple of months of match-rigging equivalent to £1.7m. Syndicate members would travel to the chosen regions and bribe people to throw the match. In some towns it was sufficient to bribe the goal-keeper, in others three or four players. Lisually the referee had to be bribed as well.

A typically Hungarian com-plication was that the two syndicates were not in collusion. So some teams found themselves bribed twice over. Fans can remember ludicrous themselves down in agony as soon as they had an opportunity to score, or referees declaring an offside violation if a goal was accidentally SCOFFE The affair came to light when Toto officials - who were not in on the deal spotted unusual combinations of winning entries.

Not surprisingly, the six million orthodox pools gam-blers felt cheated and the talk has still not died down. Two enterprising Hungarian journalists - Andras Lakatos and Zsuzsa Lang wrote and published a book within two months of the scandal, this in a country with no record of fast book production. The book sold

150.000 copies in a week
The book, based on some of the main defendants facing trial, lists exactly what bribes were paid to what team. About half a million forints in bribes was invested by the two syndicates.

Although the public - or at least the male half since women seem to regard it as the inevitable outcome of an irrational passion - is incensed, fellow footballers take more lenient view of their colleagues' conduct. Footballers are paid too little, they say: of course corruption is inevitable. The nation's top footballers have stayed relatively immune from the scandal, but the Football Federation clearly suspects that not everything is as clean as it might be even in the towering heights of the game,

The Daily Mail says the horrifying communal violence in Sri Lanka belongs to a sadly familiar pattern. Contrary to the impression given by films like Gandhi the end of the British empire meant the end of protection for millions of people belonging to minority racial groups. Every day which passes shows more clearly that we have reason for clearly that we have reason for pride not shame, at the role we once played.

The Labour right's revulsion at the prospect of the "nightmare ticket" of Neil Kinnock as leader and Miichael Meacher as deputy has given some grim satisfaction to the Gang of Four the Daily Express says. They said years ago the left's advance was too far gone to resist and they were roundly jeered at by their former colleagues who are now reging the light. seeing the light.
